

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

LONDON, JANUARY 14, 1854.

On a former occasion (10 Jur., part 2, p. 465) we took an opportunity of pointing out the numerous exceptions which the progress of society had ingrafted on the common-law rule, "Actio personalis moritur cum persona," and at the same time of introducing to the reader an exception which had then recently been made by the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, commonly called Lord Campbell's Act, and intitled "An Act for compensating the Families of Persons killed by Accidents." The change effected by that act was a most important one, not only from its having removed an anomaly in our jurisprudence, and having more nearly assimilated the law of England to that of France and Scotland, but also from having opened a much wider field for the application of those principles on which actions for injuries to the person of one, by the wrongful act or default of another, are grounded. Indeed, since the passing of Lord Campbell's Act, these principles have been very fully and learnedly discussed, principally in actions maintained under that statute; and as these recent decisions have resulted in various alterations and modifications of the law in many important respects, it is our intention, at a future period, to bring the principal cases and changes effected by them before the attention of the reader. Our present object is to discuss such difficulties as have arisen out of the stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93.

As to the maintenance of an action under that act, so far as regards the default and liability of the defendant, no difficulties peculiar to the act itself can arise, as it will appear, on reference to the 1st section, that in that respect all actions of this nature, whether brought by the person injured or by his representative, are governed by the same general principles of the law of negligence. To these we shall not at present more particularly refer, than by directing our readers to the remarks on the cases of Hutchinson v. The York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway Company (19 L. J., Ex., 296) and Thorogood v. Bryan, (18 L. J., C. P., 336). It is in the measure of damages to be awarded in each particular case, and the application of such damages when awarded, that the chief difficulties on the act present themselves.

In our first notice of Lord Campbell's Act we remarked on the peculiar application directed by the act of the damages recovered in an action brought in pursuance of it, and also the difficulty which would arise to juries in estimating them. On this latter point, Parke, B., in his charge to the jury, in the very first action which was tried, (Armsworth v. The South-eastern Railway Company, 11 Jur., part 1, p. 758), said, "There is very great difficulty cast on the jury as to fixing the amount of the damages, and both they and the judges must be very much at sea on this subject until, by a long course of decisions, some settled principle can be established." And the learned Baron then told the jury, "that they must estimate the damages as if a wound only had been inflicted"—that is to say, compensatory damages only, the English law not allowing vindictive, or, as they are technically called, exemplary damages, in ordinary actions for negligence, as in other cases of tort—such as where blighted affections of a damaged reputation are in question.

Where the party injured brings the action, compensatory damages should consist of such compensation as the jury may think proper for any pecuniary loss the plaintiff may have sustained—such as through consequent expenses incurred by him, loss of salary or profit in business, and also for the pain, suffering, and anxiety occasioned by the cause of action.

This latter ingredient, however, it would appear, is not recognised by the Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, though apparently a reasonable one, and otherwise generally admitted. But when the accident proves fatal, it is clear that the damages must be calculated on a different basis, the unfortunate sufferer himself being, in such an event, beyond any earthly compensation, and the claim of the relatives to any compensation at all depending entirely upon the statute giving them the right of action through the personal representative of the deceased. Now, what does the act say? Sect. 2 enacts, "that in every such action the jury may give such damages as they may think proportionate to the injury resulting from such death to the parties respectively for whom and for whose benefit such action shall be brought." The effect of this section was discussed at great length in a recent case, (Blake v. The Midland Railway Company, 21 L. J., Q. B., 233), where Parke, B., at Nisi Prius, somewhat varied the principle laid down by him in Armsworth v. The South-eastern Railway Company. The case of Blake v. The Midland Railway Company was an action by the plaintiff, as administratrix of her deceased husband, for her own benefit, her husband having met his death by the negligence of the defendants. In summing up, the learned judge told the jury that "there were very great difficulties in estimating anything beyond the pecuniary loss which the plaintiff had sustained by the death of her husband, but that if they saw their way to do it, they might do so;" and he added, "that it was for them to consider whether they would confine themselves to the pecuniary loss." The Court of Queen's Bench held this to be a misdirection, and granted a new trial, upon the ground that the learned judge ought more explicitly to have told the jury, that, in assessing the damages, they must not take into consideration the mental suffering of the plaintiff, and that the damages must be considered as excessive, as they certainly exceeded any loss sustained by her, admitting of a pecuniary estimate. It was argued, that, by analogy to the law of assythment in Scotland, the relatives of the person killed were entitled to damages, both as an indemnification and as a solatium; and also, that as the party injured, if he had recovered, would have been entitled to a solatium, so were his representatives on his death. But the Court held that the act did not transfer this right of action to the representatives, but gave a totally new right of action, on different principles, and pointed out that by the 2nd section the measure of damage is not the loss or suffering of the deceased, but the injury resulting from his death to the family. In the decision of this case, the argument ab inconvenienti appears deservedly to have had great weight, as it might happen that juries would be called on to apportion damages given as a solatium amongst a large family, some of whom might be lunatic, of very tender years, or even posthumous. This decision, then, carries us one step towards the establishment of a principle on which such damages are to be assessed. They must be given for injuries resulting from the death, and admitting of a pecuniary estimate. But we cannot help thinking that all difficulties on this point are not yet quite removed. On the 15th December, 1852, the case of Groves v. The London and Brighton Railway Company was tried at Guildhall, in the Court of Common Pleas, before Jervis, C. J. That was an action brought by the executor of the deceased, for the benefit of four infant children. That the deceased had met with his death through the negligence of the defendants' servants was admitted, the only question being the amount of damages. In summing up, the learned Chief Justice referred to the case of Blake v. The Midland Railway Company, and told the jury that in assessing the damages they might take into consideration any injury resulting to the children from the loss of the care, protection, and assistance of their father. The jury gave 2000*l.* Now, if the argument ab inconvenienti was permitted to prevail against the allowance of compensation for the mental anguish of the relatives, it ought not, we submit, to be without weight in considering the soundness of this direction. Juries have no small difficulties to contend with in assessing damages when they have before them evidence as to average profits, or the amount of the life income of the deceased, and have the assistance of accountants and annuity tables; but these are but trifling to those in which they must become entangled in attempting a pecuniary estimate of the loss of the care, protection, and assistance of a father. In whatever light we look at the subject, either of money or morals, we become perplexed in attempting to pursue it. It is conceived that in such cases evidence may be given of the character of the deceased, and in many cases this would doubtless be of a most painful nature. Moreover, serious practical difficulties would arise. Let us suppose, that through the negligence of a pointman—in the belief of his employers a trustworthy servant—an accident happens to a train containing the six following fathers:—An archbishop, a lord chancellor, an East India director, a lunatic, a wealthy but immoral man, and one virtuous but bankrupt. It is needless to dilate on the difficulties which juries would experience if called upon to estimate the pecuniary value of the parental care, protection, and assistance of each of these. Take one case: the assistance of a father with patronage would be of more pecuniary value than that of one without. Suppose, for instance, that the archbishop was killed, just as the posts and preferments of a Mr. Moore, or some great pluralist, were expected to become vacant, to which the right reverend prelate had intimated his intention of assisting his son, in case they both survived that event. This, we admit, is a very extreme case, but still it might happen; and then, we ask, who would be able to estimate the pecuniary loss of the care of such a father? More likely cases, however, easily suggest themselves—such as that of a professional man in good practice, to which he intended to introduce his son.

by means of the only perfect non-conductor, vaporisation, are the strongest, best, and cheapest, because the only effectual safeguards against fire, robbery, or violence, for ledgers, deeds, cash, or valuables. Lord Chief Justice Campbell, in summing up on the late trials for infringement of Milners' Safes, was pleased to observe:—"He must say he had been astonished to find such strong evidence of their usefulness; up to this hour he had no idea that there were any human means of so effectually preserving papers from the action of fire. It was a comfort for one to know that there was such an invention, by which valuable documents might be rendered secure, notwithstanding the calamity of fire." As to whether it is useful, it appears to be allowed on all hands; it seems to be a most marvellous preservative against fire, for the water remains permanently held in artificial or natural vessels; and the very calamity brings the cure, for the heat releases the water or moisture, and then it is turned into steam, and the steam moistens the substance that is to be preserved, and so it is an effectual guard against fire.

LONDON, JANUARY 21, 1854.

In our last number we considered the measure of damages, in actions under Lord Campbell's Act, for death occasioned by negligence, and we then observed that the same principles are in general as applicable to this class of actions as to those which are ordinarily brought for negligence. We now propose to consider some of these principles, distinguishing their application, where it is necessary, to individuals and to railway companies.

In actions for negligence it is necessary to prove either actual negligence, or an accident of such a nature as to afford a presumption of negligence. Proof that a stage-coach broke down was held to raise a presumption that the accident arose from the unskilfulness of the driver or the insufficiency of the coach; so, if it was overloaded, proof of excess in the number of passengers was held to be evidence that the accident arose from the overloading; but where the horses took fright, and overturned the coach, or the accident arose from foggy weather or the removal of accustomed landmarks, no presumption of negligence arose. (See Rosc. N. P. Ev. 370, and the cases cited there).

The same rule probably holds good as to accidents upon a railway; but in the latter case the character of the accidents, the means of prevention, and the greater control under which a locomotive engine is, or is supposed to be, than horses, strengthen the presumption of negligence in the event of an accident. When a stage-coach was upset by a collision with another, it might have been the fault of the "opposition," and not of the "patent safety," by which we were travelling; but on a line of railway, when a collision occurs, as both trains in general belong to the same company, the question, whether it was the fault of A. or B., can seldom arise. Again: the engine not being liable to the influences which operate upon animated beings, and which sometimes cause horses to take fright, to fall down, to take to kicking, or the like, numerous circumstances are excluded in the one case which would have to be considered in the other. Accidents on railways almost invariably occur by collisions, by running off the line, or by the breaking down of the engine or carriages. Sometimes a wheel takes fire, sometimes the train runs into a station; but in all these cases, and indeed any that may be supposed on a railway, the accident will be found to be of such a nature that might have been avoided, and therefore properly to raise the presumption of negligence against the company, and call upon them to disprove it, and not upon the plaintiff to prove it in the first instance. Prove the accident, e. g. the running off the line; it is for the company to shew that it was a mere accident, unconnected with negligence. Accordingly, in Carpus v.

The London and Brighton Railway Company, (5 Q. B. 747), it was ruled by Lord Denman, C. J., at Nisi Prius, that the plaintiff proved a prima facie case of negligence against the company, by shewing, that when the train ran off the line, whereby he was injured, the train and railway were exclusively under the management of the company. There was, however, evidence given in that case, for the plaintiff, that the rails were defective at the spot where the accident occurred, and that, considering such state of the rails, the speed was too great; and the counsel for the company abandoned their objection to the ruling of the learned judge, after having obtained a rule nisi for a new trial on that and another ground. The next case upon this point was Aldridge v. The Great Western Railway Company, (3 Man. & G. 515). That was an action against a railway company for so negligently managing and conducting an engine that sparks flew from it upon a stack of beans standing in an adjoining field, whereby the stack was destroyed. A case stated for the opinion of the Court alleged that the engines used upon the railway were such as were usually employed on railways for the purpose of propelling the train, and that the engine from which the sparks flew was used at the time in the ordinary manner, and for purposes authorised by the special act of the company. The Court held that the facts stated were not sufficient to enable them to infer either negligence or an absence of negligence, which was a question of fact for the jury. Tindal, C. J., said, "If the case had gone to trial, and the plaintiff had proved that the engines had frequently set fire to stacks, that would have shewn negligence."

.... To entitle the plaintiff to recover, he must either shew some carelessness by the defendants, or lay facts before the jury from which it may be inferred." The case was withdrawn, in order that the parties might go to trial. In the next case, (Piggot v. The Eastern Counties Railway Company, 3 C. B. 229), for a destruction of the plaintiff's premises by reason of sparks emitted from the company's engine, evidence was held admissible, in conformity with the dicta in the preceding case, to shew that other engines of the company on other occasions, in passing along the line, had thrown sparks to a sufficient distance to reach the buildings in question; and the Court further held, that the fact of premises being fired by sparks emitted from a passing engine was prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the company, rendering it incumbent on them to shew that some precautions had been adopted by them reasonably calculated to prevent such accidents. Tindal, C. J., in delivering judgment, said, "The defendants are a company intrusted by the Legislature with an agent of an extremely dangerous and unruly character, for their own private and particular advantage, and the law requires of them that they shall, in the exercise of the rights and powers so conferred upon them, adopt such precautions as may reasonably prevent damage to the property of third persons, through or near which their railway passes. The evidence in this case was abundantly sufficient to shew that the injury of which the plaintiff complains was caused by the emission of sparks, or particles of ignited coke coming from one of the defendants' engines; and there was no proof of any precaution adopted by the company to avoid such a mischance. I therefore think the jury came to a right conclusion in finding that the company were guilty of negligence, and that the injury complained of was the result of such negligence. There are many old authorities to sustain this view: for instance, the case of Mitchell v. Alestree, (1 Vent. 295), for an injury resulting to the plaintiff from the defendant riding an unruly horse in Lincoln's-inn-fields; that of Bayntine v. Sharp, (1 Lutw. 90), for permitting a mad bull to be at large; and that of Smith v. Pothol, (2 Str. 1264), for allowing a dog, known to be accustomed to bite, to go about unmuizzed. The precaution suggested by the witness called for the plaintiff in this case* may be compared to the muzzle in the case last referred to. The case of Beaulieu v. Finglam, in the Year Books, (P. 2, H. 4, fol. 18, pl. 5), comes very near to this. There the defendant was charged in case for so negligently keeping his fire as to occasion the destruction of the plaintiff's property adjoining. The duty there alleged was, 'quare, cum secundum legem et consuetudinem regni nostri Angliæ, hactenus obtentam, quod quilibet de eodem regno ignem suum salvò et securè custodiat, et custodire teneatur, ne per ignem suum damnum aliquod vicinis suis eveniat;' and there was no suggestion that it was necessary to define the particular sort of negligence that was complained of." Coltman, J., said, "that the fact of the buildings being fired by sparks emitted from the defendants' engine established a prima facie case of negligence, which called upon them to shew that they had adopted some precautions to guard against such accidents." Maule, J., said, "I am far from saying that it is impossible that this could have occurred without negligence on the part of the company; but it at least affords a strong presumption of negligence, in the absence of evidence to shew that something had been done by the company to lessen the chances of danger."

The only other case to which we shall refer is that of Richards v. The London and South-coast Railway Company, (13 Jur., part 1, p. 986; 18 L. J., C. P., 251), which was an action for negligently losing luggage, and it was held that the negligence, though alleged, need not be proved; but this decision turned upon the point, that the duty of the company was to deliver the luggage at the London station, and that, not having done so, they were liable to an action, whether such non-delivery was caused by negligence or not. (See also Forward v. Pittard, 1 T. R. 27).

Secondly, if goods be sent by railway from A. to Z., and one sum is paid for their carriage the whole distance, the company so receiving them is liable, though they be lost on intervening lines belonging to other companies. (Scotthorn v. The South Staffordshire Railway Company, 8 Exch. 341; Muschamp v. The Lancaster Railway Company, 8 M. & W. 421; Watson v. The Ambergate Railway Company, 15 Jur., part 1, p. 448). The same rule would, it appears, apply to the case of a passenger being injured on such intervening line; there can be no difference in principle; and in Muschamp v. The Lancaster Railway Company, Rolfe, B., in delivering judgment, said, "As to the case which has been put, of a passenger injured on a line of railway beyond that where he was originally booked, I suppose that has been put as a reductio ad absurdum; but I do not see the absurdity. If I book my place at Euston-square and pay to be carried to York, and am injured by the negligence of somebody between Euston-square and York, I do not know why I am not to have my remedy against the party who so contracted to carry me to York."

* Professor Farey stated that the emission of sparks or particles of ignited matter from the top of the chimney might in a great measure be prevented by a cap or covering of wire-work, or by the insertion of a perforated metal plate placed horizontally at the chord of the arch of the smoke-box, so as to intercept the particles escaping through the smoke tubes. He also stated that the danger might be altogether prevented by shutting off the steam on passing a spot where danger was to be apprehended.

Reviews.

The Succession Duty Act, 1853, (16 & 17 Vict. c. 56); with an Introduction, Notes, and an Index. By HENRY THRING, M.A., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law, and Fellow of Magdalen College, Cambridge. (2dmo., pp. 116). [Stevens & Norton.]

THE proposal made by Mr. Brodie, about four years ago*, to extend the probate, administration, and legacy duties to real estate, and to successions under settlements, has been partially acted upon in a manner which betrays a consciousness of the injustice of the tax. It is surprising indeed that Mr. Brodie, whose views respecting the so-called "burthens on land" are much more just than any that are to be found in the works of professed economists, should have failed to perceive that his own principles emphatically condemn any interference with existing taxes on realised property, whether in the way of remission or in that of imposition. Mr. Brodie proposed to substitute for the probate and administration duties a uniform tax of 3l. per cent. on all successions under settlements, wills, and intestacies, (with a proper distinction between residuary and other claims), and for the legacy duty a tax on successions, varying, like the legacy duty, with the degree of relationship, but pressing more heavily than that on distant relations and strangers. The simplicity and uniformity of the proposed measure (to say nothing of its probable productiveness) were attractive, but the country was not prepared either to commit so great an injustice, or to make so great a change, per saltum, and the extension of the probate duty to real estate is laid by in the state armoury for a future occasion. In the meantime, and as usual, no very flagrant or oppressive injustice has been committed—one of the many illustrations which are continually occurring of the felicitous working of our apparently clumsy and crazy constitutional machine, however difficult it may be to demonstrate its excellencies on any known theory of political engineering. A new tax, whether cumulative or substitutionary, direct or indirect, but especially a direct tax, is almost always partial in its incidence, and so far a confiscation; but happily our taxes are so numerous and so various as to allow of a great deal of annual tinkering at a very small cost of injustice, but with large results towards the great end of harmlessly agitating and keeping sweet the political waters. All the discords, like the notes of a forest choir, result in something very like harmony.

Mr. Thring assisted Mr. Erle in preparing the Succession Duties Act, and his object in the book before us is stated to be the explanation of the act to the general as well as to the legal reader. This has been done extremely well, and without opening doubts upon the act, which was scarcely to be expected from a writer in his position. Mr. Thring has produced a very plain and satisfactory guide in the application of the act to all ordinary cases. The act itself is remarkably short, and free from complication; but though, no doubt, its apparent simplicity has been the result of much anxious consideration, we are not free from misgivings that some serious difficulties will be experienced in its operation. The omission of any provision for defining the payment of the duty on copyholds subject to arbitrary fines is, we believe, rather to be charged on the Legislature as an error of judgment than as an oversight. Its injustice is apparent. In calculating the value of the succession, the amount of the fine (two years' full value) is to be allowed for; but the payment of the eight half-yearly instalments of the succession duty is nevertheless to commence at once, although for two years the unfortunate successor can derive no benefit from the property.

The general scope of the act is explained in a few introductory pages, from which we take the following explanation of the machinery for raising the tax on real estate, in which the whole difficulty of the application of the succession duty to real estate lay—a difficulty which was not met at all by Mr. Brodie's proposal, and which we think will not be found to have been met quite so well as a Chancellor of the Exchequer could wish by the present act:—

"There is an inherent difficulty in taxing property which does not readily admit of a partial conversion into money, and this difficulty is enhanced by the intricate limitations to which land is subjected in England, and the lengthened period during which it may be kept out of the market and occupied by persons taking only limited interests.

"The difficulty arising from the nature of land has been overcome by the manner in which the tax is imposed. For the purposes of taxation, a successor's interest in real property is considered (sect. 21) as an annuity equal in amount to the net produce of the land enjoyed by him for his life, or for any less period during which he may be entitled to the receipt of the rents and profits. The duty thus becomes a tax upon the rent, and not upon the corpus of the land; and as it is payable by four annual instalments, and not in one gross sum, there can never, under ordinary circumstances, be any necessity for a sale of any proportion of the property in order to satisfy the demands of the Crown. It is true, that by this arrangement a tenant in fee and a tenant for life pay a tax of equal amount; and the act does not attempt to distinguish between them, except in the event of the tenant for life dying before he has paid all his instalments, in which case all instalments not due at his death cease to be payable; while, in the case of a tenant in fee, the unpaid instalments continue to be a charge on the property, payable by the owner for the time being. Rules are given for estimating the value of various descriptions of real property. Advowsons are taxable only in the event of their being disposed of for money or money's worth; and personal property directed to be invested in real property, in which the successors take limited interests, is to be treated as real property."

The confusion of estates for life with estates in fee, for the purposes of taxation, is a good example of the happy ease with which a Chancellor of the Exchequer can perpetrate the grossest absurdities. Very probably Mr. Babbage, who considers that permanent and precarious incomes ought to pay the same annual income tax, is ready to demonstrate the soundness of treating life estates and estates in fee as equal "successions." In the meantime, the provision seems to us to be open to the following observations:—If an estate devolves from father to son, without diminution, during a succession of generations, and each successor pays on the value of his life interest, it is not material for the purposes of taxation whether the devolution is under limitations of successive life estates or by the repeated descent of the fee. In either case the property remains in the family, and pays the same amount. But if A. devises his land to B., a stranger, for life, with remainder to another person not related to B., B. takes under that gift a very different succession from that which he would take under a devise of the fee. True it is, that if he took the fee, and it descended to his posterity, the tax would be paid by his family; but still, with a view to any test of the value of the gift to him, or of his means to pay the tax, the value of the fee, after allowing for the value of a perpetual annuity of 1l. per cent., ought to be taken into account. Again: if a gift in fee by A. to B., a stranger, is to be regarded as a gift of successive life estates to B. and his posterity, the succession duty to be paid by B.'s issue should be at the rate of 10% per cent., and not of 1% per cent. On the other hand, if B., the devisee in fee, instead of confining his expenditure to the annual income of the estate, should sell it, and consume the capital during his life, he would have acquired and consumed a succession of far greater value than a life estate on which only he would have paid duty. The absurdity is further developed by the 31st section, which provides that personal property subject to a trust for investment in the purchase of real estate, to which the successor would be absolutely entitled, shall be charged as personal property, (i. e. on the capital sum); but personal property subject to a trust for investment in the purchase of real estate, to which the purchaser would not be absolutely entitled, shall be chargeable as real property, (i. e. on a life interest). The application of this clause will give rise to many questions; but we will assume that the status of the property at the time when the succession falls into possession is to determine the mode of charge, and that the interest of a tenant in tail is not to be regarded as an absolute interest. Then, in the case of an absolute gift, the rate of duty will depend upon the mere accident, whether at the time the succession falls the money has been actually invested in the purchase of real estate or not; and in the case of a trust for the purchase of lands to be settled in tail, the mere necessity of the idle ceremony of an inrolled assignment is to determine the lower rate of duty. Again: under the 21st section a tenant in fee pays the whole duty, although he should die before the first instalment becomes due; but a tenant in tail who sells and conveys the estate away by a disentailing assurance, and dies before the first instalment becomes due, pays nothing. (Sect. 21, upon which the question arises, whether the words "a successor who shall have been competent to dispose by will of a continuing interest in such property" include a tenant in tail who has acquired the fee by a disentailing assurance). We do not pretend that similar anomalies could be wholly avoided by any adjustments, but that only shews the inherent absurdity of a succession duty. This want of principle in the tax and in the act removes the sting from the extraordinary provision in the 8th section, that "when any Court of competent jurisdiction shall declare any succession to have been fraudulent, and made for the purpose of evading the duty imposed by this act, it shall be lawful for such Court to declare a succession to have been conferred on such person, at such time, and to such an extent as such Court shall think just; and such last-mentioned person shall be deemed to have taken a succession accordingly, derived from the person making such disposition as predecessor." We confidently anticipate that the Courts will apply the act and decide questions of evasion precisely as if this confession of incompetency had not been inserted in it. The least to be expected from the tax layer is, that he will express his mind to his own satisfaction. In fact, the framers of the act have ingeniously anticipated several modes of evasion, and met them by appropriate enactments; but we suspect that some evasive contrivances still remain unforbidden. Thus, the first branch of the 8th section directs, that when any disposition of property shall be made to take effect at a period ascertainable only by reference to the date of the death of any person, such disposition shall be deemed to confer a succession. This does not apply in terms, and cannot by construction be extended, to a disposition in favour of A., so long as he shall in person perform some service or ceremony; and upon A.'s default, to B. Again: to reduce the duty on a personal fund to the duty charged on real estate, it will only be necessary to direct a conversion into realty, to be limited to the donee in tail.

Mr. Thring's annotations to the sections of the act will be found very useful to the general reader. They consist principally of examples illustrating the application of the enactments.

LONDON, JANUARY 28, 1854.

THE resolution adopted by the gentlemen practising within the bar in Chancery, to confine themselves each to one Court and the Court of Appeal, (including, of course, the House of Lords and the Privy Council), is most satisfactory, and will, we trust, work as well for the honour, comfort, and otherwise for the advantage of those learned persons, as it undoubtedly will for the convenience of the suitor, and that generally ignored body of men called "the outer bar." It renders, however, more necessary than ever the adoption of a rule for which we long ago contended, for having, on the day appointed for motions, a paper of motions in the Courts of the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellors, as well as in the Appeal Courts; because, now that each Court will have its permanent inner bar,

VOL. XVIII.

there will be less chance than ever of counsel behind the bar, or even of the juniors of the inner bar, getting their opposed motions heard. The difference between a list and the existing system is plain enough. When motions are made according to seniority, every counsel within the bar having a right to make two motions, it follows in theory, and it has been found to follow in practice, whenever there has been a fixed Bar, that no more than two, or, at the most, three, of the leading counsel can be heard on a seal, to move. The seal being concluded, the right to move according to seniority is again acted upon at the next seal. First, the old motions are moved; next, those for which briefs have been delivered in the interval, and so on; so that the chance of moving an opposed motion, may not come to the outer bar for six or seven seals running; and in actual practice that has repeatedly and continually occurred. Now, we are not meaning to suggest that any rule ought to be adopted intended or tending to transfer business from the inner to the outer bar. We have, as we believe most junior counsel in actual practice have, an unfeigned respect for the inner bar—an unfeigned desire that its status, and all its rational privileges, should be maintained—looking upon it, as we all do, as the body that guards and represents the thoughts and interests of the whole Bar. But then, in the other hand, we have also some reverence for the rights of the suitor, and we conceive that no rule ought to interfere with his most sacred and unquestioned right to choose his counsel; and though in general he will be advised, and rightly advised, to intrust important motions to leading counsel, and to the most eminent amongst them, yet there are cases under which it may be prudent for him, and at any rate he has always a right, if it so please him, to confide a motion to younger and more obscure silk gownsmen, or even to juniors; but if he is to be told that whenever, from economy, or caprice, or from any other motive, with which no mortal has anything whatever to do, he chooses to adopt the latter course, he may wait from what in America is termed July to eternity before his unfortunate counsel can get a hearing; practically his boasted freedom of choice is arbitrarily and compulsorily interfered with. The notion of his being at liberty to select his own counsel is mythical—a pure abstraction. But this is not all; he is not merely mulcted in delay—he is heavily mulcted in costs. True, he does not refresh his counsel by supplemental fees; but his solicitor, who is bound to attend on every day of motions till the motion is made, because on any such day it may be made, is fairly entitled to make, and always does make, a charge for attendance; and thus the unhappy suitor pays frequently more for his solicitor waiting day after day, when the motion is not made, than would have secured the advocacy of the first advocate. Now, a list of motions would, so far as is practicable, remedy all this, because then no one would be bound to attend unless a motion was in the paper; and every motion being disposed of in its order, within a reasonable time every suitor would get his motion heard, whether he aspired to the dignity of being heard from the very centre of the inner bar, or modestly confined himself to the brightest wig and the blackest gown of the third row.

Something, we believe, has been said from time to time, on this subject, about some supposed privilege of the inner bar, of moving by seniority, by virtue of their patents as counsel to the Crown.

This question we would investigate as a question of legal right, if it were worth while to do so. But it scarcely can be worth while to discuss whether it ever had existence, when the privilege, if ever it did exist, has been so long virtually abandoned by the inner bar, by their acquiescence in a paper of motions in the Appeal Court. If there was anything in it, it must apply as well in that Court as in the Courts below. Indeed, as an ancient privilege, it could not have existed in the Vice-Chancellors' Courts; and in aid of this argument, it will be recollected, that motions in the subordinate Courts, at least in the Vice-Chancellors' Courts, are technically and strictly coram the Lord Chancellor, who hears them by his Vice-Chancellors; who makes, that is, signs and gives force to, the orders; who may, whenever he chooses, hear them originally; and who, when there is what is commonly called an "appeal," does not, in strictness, hear an appeal from a judge of substantively original jurisdiction, but rehears what he is supposed himself to have heard before. So that the privilege, if it had any existence, was a privilege in the Chancellor's Court, in which it has been long abolished.

On every ground, then, of right in the suitor, of absence of any antagonistic right in the inner bar, and of convenience and economy in the dispatch of business, we repeat, let it be pressed by the Profession on the attention of the judges of the Court of Chancery, that there should be a regular paper of motions, as well as of causes and petitions.

Correspondence.

THE attention of the Editor of THE JURIST is drawn to the report of a case in the Legal Observer of the 14th January, under the title, In re Clerks of Records and Writs Oaths in Chancery Act, where it is stated to have been held by the Lord Chancellor, "that a London Commissioner to administer oaths in Chancery, under the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 78, is empowered to administer the oath at the residence of the deponent, or elsewhere within ten miles of Lincoln's Inn Hall, and is not limited to his place of business*." The terms in which the Lord Chancellor delivered his opinion on the case, which was stated ex parte, are not given in this report. His Lordship said "that his attention had been previously called to the point out of court, and he had come to the opinion, not without doubt, that the act did not restrict the commissioners to administer oaths at their respective places of business; and this opinion was strengthened by an observation made to him by Lord Justice Turner, (who was on the bench), that 'it was clear that the act was not intended so to restrict them, for by the 7th section the commissioners were empowered to administer oaths in the county palatine of Lancaster.'" The learned Lord Justice must have read this 7th section hastily, for it does not bear the construction thus put upon it. It merely empowers the commissioners "to administer oaths for all suits and matters whatsoever in the Chancery of the county palatine of Lancaster." The Lord Chancellor, in giving his opinion as above, stated the limit of the London Commissioners' jurisdiction to be within ten miles of Lincoln's Inn Hall. Now, the words in the 2nd section, "within ten miles from Lincoln's Inn Hall," are merely words of qualification for the office of London Commissioner; and unless the words "at their respective places of business" are read as limiting the jurisdiction, there are no words in the act which do so. The words "at their respective places of business," being read as antecedent to the words "to administer," may not be strictly grammatical; but where is perfect grammar to be looked for in acts of Parliament? They

Sect. 1. "The persons now styled 'Masters Extraordinary in Chancery' shall cease to be so styled, and they, and all persons hereafter appointed by the Lord Chancellor to execute like duties in England, shall be designated 'Commissioners to administer Oaths in Chancery in England,' and shall possess and exercise all such powers and discharge all such duties as now appertain to the office of Master Extraordinary in Chancery by virtue of any statute or order of the Court of Chancery or of the Lord Chancellor, or usage in that behalf, or otherwise."

Sect. 2. "It shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor from time to time to appoint any persons practising as solicitors within ten miles from Lincoln's Inn Hall, at their respective places of business, to administer oaths and take declarations, affirmations, and attestations of honour in Chancery, and to possess all such other powers and discharge all such other duties as aforesaid; and such persons shall be styled 'London Commissioners to administer Oaths in Chancery;' and they shall be entitled to charge and take a fee of 1s. 6d. for every oath administered by them, and for every declaration, affirmation, or attestation of honour taken by them, subject to any order of the Lord Chancellor varying or annulling the same."

Sect. 7. "That where any person is or shall be authorised to administer oaths for the High Court of Chancery, such is and shall be authorised to administer oaths for all suits and matters whatsoever in the Chancery of the county palatine of Lancaster; and where any plea, answer, affidavit, or other document whatsoever is or shall be receivable in evidence in the High Court of Chancery, the same shall be in like manner receivable in the said court of the county palatine."

are, at all events, sense. On the contrary, reading the words as part of the qualification for the office, they are not merely surplusage, but wholly without meaning. If, as thrown out by the Lord Chancellor, there is the least doubt on the subject, it ought to be set at rest by a declaratory act; for in the event—not an unlikely one—of an indictment for perjury, or any other criminal offence, founded on an answer or affidavit sworn before one of the London Commissioners elsewhere than at his place of business, surely the defendant would get the benefit of any such doubt.

[We have not any report of the case referred to by our correspondent. If reported as stated by him, it must certainly be incorrectly reported, as it is quite impossible that the Lord Chancellor and Lord Justice Turner can have said concurrently the two things imputed to them. The Lord Chancellor may by possibility have held that the 2nd section was to be read, that persons "practising within ten miles of Lincoln's Inn Hall, at their respective places of business," may be appointed to administer oaths, without limit as to the locality in which they are to administer the oaths, though we can hardly think that his Lordship did so hold; but if he did state that opinion, then Lord Justice Turner's alleged construction of the 7th section would have been at least consistent with it. But if the Lord Chancellor held that the commissioner, though not limited to his own place of business, is limited to ten miles from Lincoln's Inn Hall, then Lord Justice Turner's alleged construction of the 7th section would be in direct opposition to, instead of supporting, the Lord Chancellor's opinion.]

We confess we greatly doubt either of the learned judges having given the opinion attributed to him, as it seems scarcely possible to doubt, that, as suggested by our correspondent, the construction of the 2nd section is, that the persons to be appointed must be solicitors practising within ten miles of Lincoln's Inn Hall, that being their qualification for appointment as London Commissioners, and that they are to administer oaths at their respective places of business, which of course would be within the ten miles. If read as appointing persons practising as solicitors within ten miles from Lincoln's Inn Hall, at their places of business, the observation immediately occurs, how can persons practise as solicitors except at their places of business?—and that if so read, then clearly there is no limit to their authority in point of locality, which would be quite inconsistent with the distinction between them as "London Commissioners" and the commissioners of the 1st section, who are only the country Masters Extraordinary with new faces. As to the 7th section, it is quite clear that all it means to do is to give to any person, who has authority to administer oaths for the Court of Chancery, the like power to administer them for the business of the Lancaster Court—not necessarily in Lancashire, but wherever the particular commissioner might administer oaths for the Court of Chancery; and so we are confident it will be decided if the point should ever come to be heard on argument.—ED.]

LONDON, FEBRUARY 4, 1854.

WHEN the Chancery Commissioners recommended the resolutions which ultimately became embodied in the Chancery Improvement Act, they made one great mistake on the subject of evidence. The mistake was of a twofold character: first, as to the mode of taking evidence; secondly, as to the machinery to be organised for taking it. It was a grave mistake of principle to interpose examiners between the witnesses and the Court. It was a very great mistake, in reference to practice, to suppose that two examiners could do half the work that would have to be done. Experience has shewn what a very little reflection might have foreseen, that, if the greater part of the evidence in Chancery causes is to be taken by examiners, not two, nor three, nor six, nor ten examiners will be sufficient. In fact, not a sitting of the Court passes, in or out of term, without numerous appointments of special examiners, because the two official examiners' offices are full.

Now, if the system of examiners to take evidence out of court, and the bringing into court at the trial a record of the evidence, were fit to be continued, we should go into some detail to consider what would be the best plan for increasing the examining staff of the Court. But as we conceive that the system of separate examiners has failed signally, and must be very soon abolished, it seems to us that it would be useless to enter on the subject. To consider the best way of mending a machine utterly defective on principle, when it is as easy, and not more, or very little more, expensive to substitute for it another machine founded on a sound principle, would be very bad engineering, and we shall not fatigue our readers with the attempt.

On the subject of evidence in courts of equity we have no hesitation in laying down the following two broad propositions:—

I. No contested case of any kind, interlocutory or otherwise, should ever be determined on affidavits alone, but the witnesses, whether parties or not, should be liable to cross-examination vivâ voce.

II. Every examination vivâ voce should be taken, when it is reasonably practicable, openly before the judge, who has the whole case opened before him, and has to determine the questions in relation to which the evidence is tendered.

The objection to evidence on affidavit only is, that it is wholly volunteer evidence, and therefore never sought, except from persons whose views, whether from bias or otherwise, are likely to be in accordance with those of the party seeking it; nor is ever tendered, unless, to at least a great extent, it does support the case of the party tendering it. In this it would be, to some extent, like the evidence of a witness examined orally in chief; but the difference is, that the latter, though intending, honestly or dishonestly, to be favourable to the party calling him, may by cross-examination be turned into an unfavourable witness. But the affidavit witness cannot as such be made to say anything but what he has said in chief. He may be, it is true, contradicted by another witness, but that is very different from being forced into neutralising wholly or partially his own original evidence. In the one case, his evidence is necessarily demolished, by shewing him to be inconsistent with himself. In the other, a mere conflict of evidence is set up, perhaps without any means existing by which the judge is to see which is the better evidence. Ex gr., suppose Mr. Brunel and some unknown engineer opposed as witnesses on an engineering question: if Mr. Brunel makes a statement in chief, and is led by cross-examination to qualify it, the qualification comes with exactly the same force as the assertion; but if the qualification comes from the unknown, the question arises at once whose evidence is the most weighty; and no one can doubt that the qualification would be treated with less respect than the assertion. All the experience, indeed, of the Court of Chancery shews, that out of affidavits, in a case of any difficulty, the truth cannot be got. Very useful evidence is to be obtained by affidavit, followed by a viva voce cross-examination, but alone it is worse than useless.

On the subject of oral examination in open court in causes on motions—in fact, wherever there is a real contest as to facts—we have already in these pages more than once shortly commented; nor shall we abandon the subject while there is a hope of drawing to it the attention of those who may have the power as well as the will to effect a change. The expense and delay, arising out of the system of separate examiners, are enormous: the expense arising out of the unnecessary multiplication of copies of irrelevant evidence; the delay, partly out of time permitted to be occupied by examiners upon irrelevant matter, partly out of the impossibility of the official examiners doing a third of the business, and the professional avocation of special examiners preventing the application of more than small portions of time to their duties as examiners. The objection continually made to the examination of witnesses in open court, that it would occupy so much time, is, we conceive, worth just nothing. Even if the result were really to be the occupation of much more judicial time, which we greatly doubt, the question resolves itself simply into one of one or two additional judges, which again resolves itself into one of expense. Now, the present examiners and their staff cost the country something like 4000*l.* a year; and the fluctuating staff of special examiners costs the suitors certainly not less than 10,000*l.* a year—we believe much more; so that the expense saved by abolishing the existing system would be just about the expense of two more judges. But, besides, the question ought not to be treated as one of mere expense. The object of evidence being to arrive at the truth, it is the interest of the people, even if they had to pay a little more for it, to have evidence taken in the best manner; and depositions taken in private, though viva voce, and transferred to a brief, to be coldly read out to the judge, instead of coming warm from the lips of the witness, do not bring out the truth in the best manner.

Of the various measures of law reform which are likely to engage the attention of Parliament during the present session, we have no hesitation in ranking as the most important the bill which is promised by the Government on the subject of the testamentary jurisdiction at present exercised by the Ecclesiastical Courts. Considering that about thirty years (the period mentioned by Lord John Russell as requisite for the gestation of a measure of law reform) have been expended by the Legislature in fruitless attempts either to abolish these inconvenient and anomalous tribunals altogether, or to reform their procedure—attempts made by Lord Brougham, Lord Cottenham, Lord Lyndhurst, Sir James Graham, the present Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, Dr. Nicholl, and, last session, by the present Solicitor-General—the public may fairly congratulate itself upon at length having a prospect of a satisfactory solution of this important and much-vexed question. Some of these attempts were unsuccessful simply because they proposed to deal with the purely ecclesiastical as well as the civil jurisdiction which in the progress of time had become so strangely blended together in these spiritual courts; but public men, learned by experience, have now become wiser and more discreet as to the course of action which is likely to be acceptable to the Legislature and to the country, and they therefore propose gradually to abstract from Doctors' Commons separate portions of its jurisdiction, leaving it in possession only of its Admiralty and Spiritual jurisdiction. At the present conjuncture, when a war appears imminent, and when innumerable cases of prize, of the rights of neutrals, and of the construction of international law must constantly arise, the practitioners at Doctors' Commons will still have left a sufficient amount of lucrative business to console them for the inevitable loss of testamentary and divorce cases, even should they decline to practise in the ordinary civil courts, which, as a fair measure of compensation, ought for the future to be opened to them. Her Majesty, in the speech from the throne, announces that "the recent measures of legal reform have proved highly beneficial, and the success which has attended them may well encourage you (Parliament) to proceed with further amendments. Bills will be submitted to you for transferring from the ecclesiastical courts to the civil courts the cognisance of testamentary and of matrimonial causes, and for giving increased efficiency to the superior courts of common law." The question here occurs, to what "civil courts" are these testamentary and matrimonial causes to be transferred? The Divorce Commissioners, in their report, recommend the constitution of a new court, composed of a vice-chancellor, a common-law judge, and the judge of the Consistorial Court; and that recommendation, we believe, will be carried out by the Government without any unnecessary delay. In dealing with so difficult and delicate a subject as divorce, many important matters have to be considered, such as extending to the poor a privilege which has hitherto been practically the luxury of the rich, and the moral and social injury which might be done to the community by furnishing too great a facility for divorce. On this last point Chancellor Kent remarks, "It is very questionable whether the facility with which divorces can be procured in some of the States of America be not productive of more evil than good;" and he adds, "that he has had reason to believe, in the exercise of a judicial cognisance over numerous cases of divorce, that adultery was sometimes committed, on the part of the husband, for the very purpose of obtaining a divorce." One recommendation of the commissioners, on the most obvious grounds of justice, ought to be reconsidered—we mean that which restricts the right of a wife to a divorce à vinculo to cases of "aggravated enormity." These matters we therefore hope will be carefully considered before the measure of the Government is introduced into Parliament.

With regard to the testamentary jurisdiction, the sole question which remains to be decided is simply this—to what tribunal can it be most beneficially transferred? The Real Property Commissioners and Lord Cottenham advocated the establishment of one central court of probate, with a general registry of wills; and Lord Lyndhurst advocated the establishment of metropolitan and diocesan courts throughout the kingdom. Both these noble and learned Lords contemplated the abolition of the courts of peculiars, which—scattered all over the country, some possessing only a limited jurisdiction, and some possessing only voluntary and not contentious jurisdiction—were as inconvenient as they were unnecessary. In the last session of Parliament the whole question was thoroughly discussed, in reference to the bold and vigorous plan sketched by the Solicitor-General, and the plan which was embodied in a measure introduced by Mr. Collier. The Solicitor-General proposed to abolish the peculiar courts, to regulate the future jurisdiction of the diocesan courts in matters of common form up to a limited amount, and to transfer the whole testamentary jurisdiction, at present exercised by the Prerogative Court, to the Court of Chancery. He further proposed that questions of fact might be sent to the county courts for decision, and that the same tribunals might grant administration in cases where the property did not exceed a certain amount. This plan, which commanded the approbation of the House of Commons, was postponed until the Chancery Commissioners made their second report on the subject referred to them, namely, "to inquire into the law and jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical and other courts in relation to matters testamentary." In the meantime Mr. Collier brought in his bill to transfer the testamentary jurisdiction to the common-law courts; and this conflict of propositions led the practitioners in Doctors' Commons to assert that this great question had degenerated into a mere squabble between different classes of professional men for a monopoly of the testamentary business. The Chancery Commissioners have not yet made their report, but it is believed that at the last moment they have been induced substantially to sanction the plan suggested by the Solicitor-General. The Court of Chancery at the present time is the great court of administration of the country; it already possesses a most important testamentary jurisdiction; it has machinery admirably calculated for the cheap and expeditious determination of all questions which may arise in connexion with wills; and its amended procedure is so deservedly popular, that we are convinced, even if the commissioners adhered to Lord Cottenham's plan of a separate court, they would have to import into that tribunal the simple and rational system which now exists in Chancery. The common-law courts possess no machinery for administration purposes; and though Mr. Collier, in defence of his own consistency, may say a word in their favour, we believe that the time is at hand when Doctors' Commons must part with its testamentary jurisdiction to the Court of Chancery; and thus an important step will be made towards the obliteration of that system of separate and distinct jurisdictions—curious, perhaps, on account of its antiquity, but utterly repugnant to the wants and wishes of the age in which we live.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 11, 1854.

It is curious to observe society, in an advanced and artificial state, reverting by degrees to the primitive institutions of its ancestors; the movement, apparently retrogressive, is, in fact, progressive, for it casts aside products which have remained, although the reasons which led to them have long since ceased. Such a process is visible at the present day in several branches of our jurisprudence. We pass by the instance of county courts, which, flourishing in the time of Alfred, fell into comparative desuetude for centuries, but are now invested with almost ancient jurisdiction. We pass by also the system of pleading, once concise and simple, then subtletised and elaborated, and now simplified once again. The instance which we select, in preference to others, is the proposed transfer of the probate and divorce jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical tribunals to the temporal courts of our realm. The history of this jurisdiction may be briefly traced thus:—

In the time of our Saxon ancestors there was no distinction between the lay and the ecclesiastical jurisdiction; the county court was at once spiritual and temporal, and the rights of the church and the laity were ascertained at the same time and by the same judges. The whole man was thus provided for by one tribunal, instead of taking his conscience to Doctors' Commons, and his body to Westminster Hall; he was recognised as a being possessing a duplex nature, and having interests in two worlds to provide for at one and the same time. It was a hard case indeed if neither the bishop nor the sheriff could hit the offender; the one commanded bailiffs and the other ecclesiastical censures, and were thus prepared either for the tender conscience or the hardened corpus. For this purpose the bishop and the ealderman or earl, or his deputy the sheriff, used to sit together in the county court, and had there the cognisance of all causes, a superior deference being paid to the bishop's opinion in spiritual matters, and to that of the lay judges in temporal, as at the present day, when, at times, Maule, J., sits by the Lords Justices Knight Bruce and Turner to administer law as well as equity.

The ecclesiastical court, however, was separated from the civil by William the Conqueror in order to gratify the foreign clergy, by whom he was supported. He prohibited any spiritual cause from being tried in the secular courts, and commanded the suitors to appear before the bishop only, whose decisions were ordered to conform to the canon law. Henry I, among other restorations of the law of Edward the Confessor, revived this of the union of the civil and ecclesiastical courts. The clergy, however, did not relish being put on a level with the profane laity, and on the accession of Stephen they brought about a dissolution of the newly-effected union. About this time the contest began between the laws of England and those of Rome, the temporal courts adhering to the former, and the spiritual adopting the latter: "this," says Blackstone, "widened the breach between them, and made a coalition afterwards impracticable, which probably would have been effected at the general reformation of the church."

This separation being established, the only remaining question would be, what causes were spiritual or ecclesiastical, as pertaining to the "regimen of the soul?" The answer would determine the tribunal to which they should be referred. We propose to consider how causes testamentary and matrimonial, with which we are at present interested, were brought within the category. As to causes testamentary, they seem to have been first given to the clergy at the time of the last dissolution of the union of the lay and spiritual courts in Stephen's time*, and it came about in this manner.

The foreign clergy were early ambitious of this branch of power, but their attempts to assume it on the continent were effectually curbed by the edict of the Emperor Justin, (Cod. 1, 3, 41), which restrained the probate of testaments, as formerly, to the office of the magister census; for which the Emperor assigns this reason—"Absurdum etenim censeri ut, tametsi opprobriosum, si peritos se velint ostendere deceptionum esse forensium." Afterwards, however, by the canon law, it was allowed that the bishop might compel, by ecclesiastical censures, the performance of a bequest to pious uses. This made a locus for such uses a spiritual cause, and afterwards intestacies were brought under the same denomination, when Henry I directed that the personal property of an intestate should be divided for the good of his soul; to which King Stephen added, "ecclesie comilio.*" By the old law, the King is sometimes said to have been entitled to seize upon the goods of an intestate, and that this privilege was granted by him as a franchise to many lords of manors; and that afterwards, in favour of the church, the prelates were invested with this branch of the prerogative, which was done, says Perkins, because it was intended by the law that spiritual men are of better conscience than laymen, and that they had more knowledge what things would conduce to the benefit of the soul of the deceased†. And as the bishop had thus the disposition of the intestate's effects, the probate of wills followed, for it was thought just and natural that the will of the deceased should be proved to the satisfaction of the prelate, whose right of distributing the chattels was effectually superseded thereby. This power, obtained by encroachment, was grossly abused, until at length the ordinary was compelled to grant administration to the next of kin. Blackstone remarks on the strangeness of ranking testamentary causes among matters of a spiritual cognisance, as they are certainly of a "mere temporal nature," and states, that in almost all other (even in Popish) countries all matters testamentary are under the jurisdiction of the civil magistrate‡.

Although the spiritual courts have exclusive jurisdiction in establishing the will, yet the courts of equity have a concurrent jurisdiction with them in construing it; and it has happened that this jurisdiction has been exercised in a way to render the instrument, of which probate has been granted, ineffectual as a will. (See Gawler v. Handewick, 2 Cox, 16; Thornton v. Curling, 8 Sim. 310). And where a probate has been obtained by fraud on the next of kin, the Court of equity will interfere; and since Lord Nottingham's time, it has been accustomed to administer relief to legatees. It should also be remembered that the jurisdiction of spiritual courts is confined to goods and chattels, and a devise of lands must be proved by the will itself.

Marriage, although in the nature of a civil contract conferring civil rights, was brought within courts spiritual by being made a sacrament. This was soon after the separation of the courts||; and the determination of questions of legitimacy and bastardy followed almost as of course. Blackstone, (3 Com. 92), speaking of this assumption of matrimonial causes by the church, says, "In the hands of such able politicians, it soon became an engine of great importance to the Papal scheme of an universal monarchy over Christendom. The numberless canonical impediments that were invented, and occasionally dispensed with, by the Holy See not only enriched the coffers of the church, but gave it a vast ascendancy over princes of all denominations, whose marriages were sanctified or reprobated, their issue legitimatised or bastardised, and the succession to their thrones established or rendered precarious, according to the humour or interest of the reigning Pontiff, besides a thousand nice and difficult scruples with which the clergy of those ages puzzled the understandings and loaded the consciences of the inferior orders of the laity, and which could only be unravell'd and removed by these their spiritual guides. Yet, abstracted from this universal influence, which affords so good a reason for their conduct, one might otherwise be led to wonder that the same authority which enjoined the strictest celibacy to the priesthood should think them the proper judges in causes between man and wife. These causes, indeed, partly from the nature of the injuries complained of, and partly from the clerical method of treating them, soon became too gross for the modesty of a lay tribunal.*"

If the spiritual court proceed to call a marriage in question upon grounds that render it merely voidable, after the death of either of the parties, the courts of common law will prohibit them from proceeding, because it tends to disinherit and bastardise the issue, who cannot so well defend the marriage as the parties themselves when living might have done. The sacramental nature of marriage was completely destroyed, in the eyes of the law, by stat. 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, allowing marriages to take place in a registered building, before the registrar of the district.

Thus a review of the history of these two branches of ecclesiastical jurisdiction shews, first, that they are of a character naturally and properly cognisable by the temporal courts; secondly, that the reasons on which they were founded have ceased to exist; the ordinary is no longer entitled to the goods of an intestate; marriage is not regarded by the law as a sacrament, but simply as a civil contract: and, thirdly, that the temporal courts do still exercise some jurisdiction over these ecclesiastical courts, such as prohibiting them from exceeding their powers, or even declaring a will void which they have declared proved. We have purposely confined our remarks to these two matters, causes testamentary and matrimonial; but we believe it will be found that objections of almost similar force may be raised against every part of the ecclesiastical jurisdiction in this country as exercised in the spiritual courts.

EXTRACTS FROM THE SECOND REPORT OF THE CHANCERY COMMISSIONERS ON THE JURISDICTION IN TESTAMENTARY MATTERS.

As to the constitution of the proposed testamentary court, the Commissioners report as follows:—

"We recommend that the court to be established should be called 'Her Majesty's Court of Probate,' and should hold its sittings at such place, in London or Middlesex, as your Majesty shall appoint; and that this court should be a superior court of record, and that the proceedings therein should be in your Majesty's name.

"We consider, that, from the nature of the subjects to be brought before the Court, there should be but one judge, whose decisions should be subject to appeal. The mode and course of appeal we shall notice in a subsequent part of this report.

"We recommend that the qualification of the judge should be a standing of ten years as advocate of the Court of Arches, or serjeant or barrister at law, and that the judge of the court should be appointed by the Crown, and should hold his office during good behaviour, and be removable upon an address by both Houses of Parliament. In order to provide for the occasional illness of the judge, we think that power should be given to the Crown to appoint some other person to act temporarily as judge whenever the occasion should arise; and the judge should have power, during vacations and on other special occasions, to appoint, with the consent of the Lord Chancellor, some competent person to transact the necessary business incident to the passing of probates and letters of administration, which is now transacted by surrogates, and such other business as may require immediate attention.

† In 2 Bl. Com., by Sweet, 494, note 4, the position that the Crown ever had this prerogative is controverted.

* The italics are ours, but are scarcely required, to mark the sly satire of the commentator, who truly adds, in a note, "Some of the impurest books that are extant in any language are those written by the Popish clergy on the subjects of matrimony and divorce." The morbid state of a man devoted to celibacy, and speculating on marriage and divorce, is only too apparent from the Disputationes de Sancto Matrimonii Sacramento, by Saubach, and similar works.

"We think that the officers of the court should be appointed by the judge, with the approbation of the Lord Chancellor; and that the subordinates of these officers should be appointed by the officers themselves, with the approbation of the judge. In order, however, that the new Court may have the immediate assistance of officers trained in the performance of similar duties, we think that it will be convenient that the present deputy registrars of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, and the assistant clerks of seats, and such other officers of that court as are engaged in and competent to the performance of active duties, should become officers of the Court of Probate, and perform such duties as shall be assigned to them respectively by any general rules or orders of the Court.

"Subject to this provision, we think that the officers of the Court of Probate should be selected from advocates or barristers, or persons practising as proctors or solicitors, or from other competent persons now engaged in the performance of active duties in some court exercising testamentary jurisdiction.

"The judge and the principal officers of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury are at present paid wholly by fees. We think that this should not be the case in the Court of Probate, but that the judge and officers of that court should be paid wholly by salaries.

"The deputy registrars of the Prerogative Court and some of the other officers of that court are now allowed to practise as proctors; but we are of opinion that no officer of the Court of Probate should be allowed, directly or indirectly, to practise.

"It is scarcely necessary to say, that we strongly disapprove of the duties of any of the officers of the court being discharged by deputy.

"We think that the registrars of the court in London and commissioners in the country should be empowered to take affidavits, and transact other formal business now performed by surrogates.

"The establishment of a single court, holding its sittings in London or Middlesex, for the transaction of the whole of the testamentary business of England, may probably be objected to under the apprehension of increased expense and inconvenience to persons residing in the country. We have, indeed, reason to believe, that in cases of small properties such persons would not be satisfied with any measure which would deprive them of the means they have hitherto enjoyed of resorting to courts within their own districts for probates and letters of administration. We therefore proceed to consider this objection.

"We have already pointed out that the possession of a probate or letters of administration enables a person at once to obtain and dispose of all the available personal estate of the deceased. Stock to any amount may be sold in a few hours, and the produce irrecoverably lost, without the knowledge of the persons really interested. It is indispensably necessary, therefore, to provide the utmost practicable protection to the public against fraud or mistake.

"The state of the law as to bona notabilia has hitherto secured this protection to the public to a very great extent, a prerogative probate or administration having been resorted to in all cases in which the deceased was possessed of any funded property; but if there be no longer any distinction as to bona notabilia, and country courts continue to exist, this source of protection will be lost.

"It is, we think, evident that this protection would be best afforded to the public by a central court in London. The skill and vigilance required to guard against frauds or mistakes will, we think, be more certainly possessed and applied by officers in London under the immediate control of the judge, to whom they will have the opportunity of applying on any emergency, and to whom they will be immediately responsible. If the convenience of the public would permit it, we should desire that this protection should be afforded in all cases; but we think that this is not the case, and that the more perfect security afforded by the transaction of the testamentary business in London is not in all cases imperatively required.

"The danger to be apprehended is from fraud or mistake, and this danger principally arises in cases of funded property. In the agricultural districts, where the continuance of the present local accommodation is most desired, the property of the deceased, where it is of small amount, rarely includes money invested in the public funds, or other similar securities, of which an immediate disposition can be made by virtue of the probate or letters of administration.

"We think, therefore, that in cases of small properties the transaction in London of the business of obtaining probate and letters of administration may reasonably be dispensed with; and the arrangement which we propose will, to a great extent, unite the advantages of local and central testamentary courts.

"We recommend that district offices, through which probates or administrations may be taken out in cases of small properties, should be established in different parts of the country as branches of the Court of Probate, each of such districts to comprise a county or counties, or some known division of a county or counties."

PARLIAMENT appears likely this year to discuss several legal measures of great importance—the testamentary jurisdiction; the law of succession to real estate; and the establishment of public prosecutors; and we hope will be added the establishment of an appeal on all points in criminal matters. On the first we have in these pages offered some remarks, and shall again when the measure begins to progress. Our present business is, however, with the law of succession to real estate, and the public prosecutors bill. Of the proposition for the latter, it seems to us that nothing but approbation can exist in any but the felonial mind of the country; the principle of it is obviously just and proper. Not merely is it a fiction of the law, but a reality of jurisprudence, that the wrong done by a criminal act is a wrong to the State, which it is the interest and duty of the State to repress, not leaving its punishment to the personal irritation or revenge of the particular member of the State who suffers the injury; and accordingly every one, who is the victim of a criminal offence, ought, according to law, to prosecute for it—not for his personal injury, but on behalf of society generally. But unfortunately, in practice, the State contenting itself with laying down the theory, and giving as little assistance as possible to individuals in carrying it out, beyond providing magistrates and a police, the result is, that in the vast majority of cases of petty offences, and in a very great number of cases of a grave kind, the victim of the offence finds it far better to content himself with quietly bearing the evil he has suffered, than to become further a victim to society, by offering, at his own expense and loss of time, to play the part of public prosecutor. It may be the indication of a low state of patriotism, but it is at any rate a fact, that the feeling with most men—the avowed maxim with many—is, let society take care of itself, and do not expect me, an individual, to sacrifice for it my time, money, and comfort. Public prosecutors, paid by the State to do the work of society which individuals will not do, are therefore an absolute necessity, and we rejoice greatly to see the measure brought forward. There may be a little difficulty about the details, but that will be easily overcome.

Of the other proposition, that for abolishing the law of primogeniture, as it is termed, we cannot say we entertain quite so favourable an opinion. The mode of devolution of property to be adopted in any country is, no doubt, entirely a matter of convenience and arrangement, and one mode of devolution may be fitting in a certain period of the civilisation of a country, and very unfitting at another; but before proceeding to alter the law, the public should at least have a clear conception of what it really is. Now, when, what is called in political rather than legal language, the law of primogeniture is discussed, the very general idea is, that it is some law compelling the descent of land to the eldest son; and because people see that nearly all the great estates in the country do go, on the death of the father, to the eldest son, they have an idea that at any rate, as regards the estates of the nobility, such devolution is the compulsory act of the law. Every lawyer knows of course, and, were it not from the hope that these pages may occasionally stray into the hands of some democratic layman, we should not here repeat, that the descent of land to the eldest son, by law, is the exception; that it only takes place where the owners have not by contract made other arrangements; that every owner of unsettled and unfettered land may do what he likes with it—give it to his youngest son, or to his youngest daughter, or to all of them, if he pleases; that the devolution to the eldest son, so constantly seen in great estates, is entirely the work of the parties by contract and arrangement; and that, so far from land being obliged to go to the eldest son for ever and ever, no land can be fettered for more than a given and not very long period.

The question is, as we have said, one of convenience; and then the consideration is, whether the law, being such that the owner of land can, if he thinks fit, dispose of it among all his children, or settle it on the eldest son, with such qualifications as he likes, or let it descend to him if he likes—the consideration is, we say, whether, with regard to this kind of property, the doctrine of laissez faire is not as applicable as it is to commercial property.

Great landowners are not obliged to keep their estates undivided, but they almost always do so. The inference is, that they prefer that course of succession; and why should they not, if they find or think that a convenient arrangement of property, be left so to deal with it? We assume, of course, that a part of the proposition to abolish the existing law of descent is to substitute some compulsory partition, analogous to that required by the French law; for if all that is done is to repeal the law of descent to the eldest son, and substitute an equal division by descent, not interfering with the power of settling by deed or will, such a change would be quite idle—the result would be simply a few more wills and settlements. The tendency of owners of considerable estates in this country is obviously to keep them together. They will do so if not prevented; and they will only tie up their estates more frequently by settlement, if they know that by leaving them to descend according to law, they will be split and severed.

THE STATUTE-LAW COMMISSION.

MR. BULLENDEN KER has recently made a second report on the proceedings of the Board for the Revision of the Statute Law, in which he has reproduced rather more in detail the views sketched out in his first report; and as the Lord Chancellor seems to be satisfied with Mr. Ker's proceedings and plan, and has announced the preparation by the board of a series of bills, it will be important to see what the results really are which have been arrived at by the board, or rather by the chief commissioner, whose views are by no means coincident in all points with those of his colleagues.

The processes for consideration are—1. The revision of the statutes, to ascertain what are repealed or obsolete, and what in force. 2. The digestion of their contents, not as a legislative measure, but as affording the basis of legislation. 3. The preparation of consolidated and amended statutes, based on such a digest.

A revision of the statutes, Mr. Ker thinks, is demanded by many who do not know very clearly what they are asking. The real statute-book—the rolls of Parliament—are an historical collection, containing the laws of past ages as well as the existing laws; and to which, of course, it is no reproach that it is what it is and pretends to be. The printed editions of the Statutes at Large, as they are called, contain much that is useless for practical purposes; but they are private speculations, and Mr. Ker thinks that such publications should be left to private enterprise—on the general laissez faire principle now so much in fashion. Unauthorised by Parliament, a Government compilation, professing to shew the statutes in force, would have no peculiar value; and here we agree with Mr. Ker, but we think he is talking quite beside the purpose when he says, that an edition enacted by Parliament, declaring both affirmatively and negatively that those, and those only, are the statutes now in force, is quite impracticable, and would be of little use if it could be done. No doubt that would be so if the work were to stop there; but, as we shall have occasion to shew presently, such a revision of the statutes is, in our opinion, the essential and only practical basis of a thorough amendment of our statutes. For the same reason, we can see no pertinency in the distinction taken by Mr. Ker between expired and repealed acts. It is illogical to repeal an expired act; but who proposes to do so? All that is wanted is an authoritative declaration that such and no other statutory enactments are for the time being in force.

With respect to digestion, Mr. Ker observes, that though that is with every draftsman a necessary preliminary process to consolidation, “it does not follow that it is desirable actually to make a complete digest of the existing law, merely as an intermediate stage, before commencing the final process of consolidation, which is the only one really important, because it is the only one which really implies any improvement of the existing law; for the revision of the statutes, as already observed, implies only a publication, not authenticated, (except in the limited sense of a repeal of obsolete and doubtful statutes); a digest also implies only a publication; while I apprehend that your Lordship's great and immediate object is, to be provided with materials for direct legislative action towards the improvement of the statute law.”

No doubt the Lord Chancellor would be glad to have some result to shew as soon as possible; but we apprehend that he would more gladly submit to labour in obscurity for a few years, if he could thereby insure the permanent amendment, not merely of our present statute law, but of our legislative practice. Let us see if anything tending to this result is proposed. Mr. Ker says:—

“Having thus stated my reasons for not recommending certain measures, I now proceed to state what are the measures which I do recommend; and, after the best consideration that I have been able to give to the subject, I think the course most feasible and most practically conducive to the desired result of an improved state of the statute law is the gradual consolidation, or, as I would rather call it, the re-writing of the statute law—combining, of course, with such consolidation or re-writing all such improvements of the law as can be suggested; in short, continuing a process which has for a long period been applied to isolated subjects, and in a desultory way—always, however, with the most marked advantage—but more rapidly, more carefully, and in a more uniform manner, and with more particular regard to the clear abrogation of all the previous statute law on the same subject. As fast as this process is performed, with reference to any branch of the law which is the subject of a group of statutes, the two other processes mentioned by your Lordship's memorandum will have been effectually performed also—that is, a digest will have been actually or virtually made, and, in the course of framing the act, used and become unnecessary, and all the uncertainties which could be noticed on a revision will have been cleared up. Perhaps the foregoing proposal may appear no great matter to those who have been expecting something new and great and comprehensive, which was to relieve the public at once of those thirty-nine quarto volumes, and all the other annoyances of which complaints are so common. My answer to any one who should express any such disappointment would be, that it is something to have ascertained clearly that there is nothing new or great or comprehensive to be done. Vague language, both in speaking of the inconvenience of the present state of the law, and of the remedies to be brought to it, has been one, and not the least, of the causes which have hitherto deterred practical and moderate men from attempting to effect improvements; and if I have proved that the old and known course is also the best, if not the only course that admits of being practically pursued, I have at any rate proved something which was not universally felt or admitted before.”

In support of this proposal, Mr. Ker observes—first, that it is useless to propose any work which is not of such a nature and in such a form that it can hope to pass through Parliament, according to its present constitution and usages; secondly, that a scientific analysis of the law would not afford facilities either to the public for reference and use, or to the Legislature for appeal; that to keep rights and remedies distinct, as has been suggested, the whole law must be recast; and gradual amendment, in the way proposed by Mr. Ker, would be impracticable. But this last remark is not, we presume, offered as an argument in favour of Mr. Ker's plan.

“The law,” says Mr. Ker, “must be in such a form that it may be altered by isolated bills in any particular, and by bills which may be themselves discussed, altered, partially abandoned in their progress through the House, &c.; and any classification so abstract that the results of such alterations or abandonments in the course of debate could not be seen with tolerable clearness and ease, would be an obstruction to the course of business, and bills would be passed in defiance of such a classification. I imagine that those who advocate any such classification as I have alluded to unconsciously reserve to themselves a power of treating all new acts of Parliament merely as resolutions or instructions from which they themselves are to make the necessary alterations in their statutory code. It is obvious that nothing of this kind is practicable without an entire change in the mode of passing bills; and the arrangement of the law must therefore be such that the laws passed by future Parliaments, in the way in which we know they will and must be passed, whether well or ill drawn, will not be absolutely incapable of amalgamating with the old.”

Mr. Ker must be speaking ironically when he deprecates a classification “so abstract that the result of alterations or abandonments in the course of debate could not be seen with tolerable clearness and ease.” If obscurity and difficulty, instead of clearness and facility, were the incidents of classification, the present practice of passing bills and amendments, of which neither the framers nor the legislators see the results, must surely be a good preparation for legislating on a classified statute-book.

We find it difficult to reconcile Mr. Ker's denial of the practicability of a consolidation of the whole of our statute law at once with his recognition of the complete success of a similar experiment in America. The state of the statute law and the constitution and usages of the Legislature of New York, at the time when the revised statutes of New York were passed, were not so widely different from those now existing as to allow of a consolidation which would be impracticable in the one state, being readily effected in the other. Mr. Ker says in his first report, that “the state of New York, having long felt the necessity of a revision of their statutes, which were in a great degree similar to those in this country, a commission was issued, and a very successful revision and consolidation of the statutes was effected. . . . The whole revised statutes, containing the reports of the commissioners, is printed in three moderate-sized octavo volumes;” and the same thing has been done in the state of Massachusetts. Whether the New York commissioners performed their task well or ill, and whether experience has shewn, or will shew, that they acted wisely, when “in numerous instances they reduced the rules of the common law to a text, and inserted them in their proper place in connexion with the statutory provisions on the subject to which they relate,” is not material to the present question. The examples of New York and Massachusetts prove that the consolidation of the whole statute law of a country may be effected consistently with the forms and usages of a constitutional legislature.

Mr. Ker says—“I have requested Mr. Rogers to draw up a paper containing a statement of the several groups of statutes which relate to the same subject, and which he conceives may be properly embodied in separate consolidation acts. This statement, although it is not of course to be considered as complete, is very useful, as shewing the present state of the statute-book, and the probable advantage which would arise from the process of consolidation. This paper is subjoined, and I think will shew the great and accurate knowledge possessed by Mr. Rogers of the whole contents of the statute-book. Another paper, on the consolidation or revision of the statutes relating to property, entering into greater detail than the nature of Mr. Rogers's paper admits of, is in course of preparation by myself and Mr. Brickdale, and will be presented to your Lordship with my next report.”

The paper by Mr. Rogers is a kind of index to the general acts, without the references, but stating the number of acts on each subject, arranged alphabetically, in subdivisions, under the following general heads:—“The Crown and Parliament,” “Finance,” “Public Economy,” “Rights of Private Persons,” “Persons under Disabilities,” “Administration of Civil Justice,” “Criminal Law,” “Administration of Criminal Justice,” and “Religion.”

Mr. Rogers calls this table “An Analysis of the Public General Acts.” It has no claim to that title. Analysis, in relation to the subject in hand, means a pulling to pieces for the purpose of re-arrangement, and a systematic re-arrangement of the results. Here is neither a pulling to pieces nor a re-arrangement. The subjects of the various acts are taken in the concrete, as they have been taken by the Legislature, and indexed. Systematic arrangement in such a proceeding was impossible. Accordingly we find “Education, Science, and the Fine Arts,” a subdivision of the head “Public Economy;” while there is, widely removed in the table, a distinct head of “Religion.” The latter head includes the subjects of Dissent, Tithes, and Leases of Church Lands; while Herey and Roman Catholic Relief are placed under “Criminal Law;” the Land Tax under “Finance;” County Rates under “Public Economy;” and Alienation under “Rights of Private Persons.” Again: the Customs, the Post-office, &c. are subdivisions of “Finance;” but Offences against the Customs and Post-office Laws are classed under “Criminal Law.” With respect to debtor and creditor, we find Benefit Building Societies, Industrial and Provident Institutions, Insurance and Joint-stock Companies, under “Public Economy;” Fraudulent Assurances and Mortgages under “Rights relating to

Real Property; Bills of Exchange, Bonds, Contracts, Debts, and Usury, under "Rights relating to Personal Property;" Bankruptcy under "Persons under Disability;" and Insolvent Debtors and Judgments under "Administration of Civil Justice." It is not on such a classification as this that any plan for the permanent improvement of the statute law can be founded. If we had nothing to deal with but the existing statutes, the arrangement, bad as it is, might be tolerable. But as the moral perceptions and requirements of a nation are continually changing, and the law is being continually altered in accordance with them*, we must provide for development as well as present arrangement. The bankrupt law was consolidated after a fashion by the stat. 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, but no provision was made for its future amendment on any systematic plan; and the consequence was, that, in a short time, successive amending and altering statutes again reduced the bankrupt laws to such a state of confusion, that even the wretched "Bankrupt-law Consolidation Act, 1849," was accepted as an improvement. No provision can be made for the systematic revision of any consolidation act that is not part of a previously settled and complete arrangement of the law; for in classification, though we begin with particulars, we must from them ascend to generals, and then come back to details before any two particulars can be rightly placed with regard to each other.

Mr. Ker's scheme of a succession of consolidation acts, on subjects taken at random from the "Analysis" of Mr. Rogers, would indeed furnish perpetual employment to a permanent board of commissioners, but it would not redeem the Lord Chancellor's promise, nor answer the just expectations of the Profession. Such a work might go on for ever, without in the least tending to a rational arrangement of the subjects of legislation. It has been shewn by Mr. Coode, and may be assumed as an axiom, that the only way to prevent the statute law, once arranged, from getting into confusion, is to have the entire codex or statute-book perpetually under revision by the Legislature. Whenever an alteration is made, it must be made by the way of elision and substitution—the old matter must be erased, the new put into its place. It is impossible to do this until the whole matter has been arranged on such a system as to leave no room for doubt as to the proper and exact place for every provision, however minute—a system like that adopted by Mr. Coode in preparing the digest of the poor laws, of which he says, "It contains about 7400 articles. In reducing them to the systematic order and expression here recommended, I may be allowed to say, that, anomalous and absurd as a great part of the matter is, there was in no instance the least occasion for doubt or difficulty as to either the order of any article, or its expression." In digesting, a few years ago, into 873 articles, the heterogeneous matter known as the Penal or Criminal Law, there was no more occasion of doubt or difficulty." For example, it has been thought fit at various times to require certain solemnities to particular contracts, or acts affecting private rights; and the result has been a great diversity of statutory requisitions, without any common principle to justify that diversity. Some contracts and some acknowledgments of right must be in writing, signed by the principal only; others may be signed by the principal or his agent. The old Copyright Acts required licenses to be in writing, attested by two witnesses, but were silent as to assignments. Alienations for charitable purposes must be by indenture, attested by two witnesses, and inrolled. Alienations by tenants in tail must be inrolled. The assignment of ships is subject to peculiar regulations: registration is required for the protection of purchasers in some cases, not in others. Certain warrants of attorney are void, unless executed and attested in a special manner. Consents to judges' orders, having the same effect, are under no such statutory restriction. The object of each of these provisions is either the protection of the actor from inadvertence or fraud, the publication of the act, or the preservation of evidence of it; and in a well-devised (and therefore well-arranged) statute-book they would all be found together, and not scattered here and there, as Mr. Rogers would have them, under such heads as "Contracts relating to Lands," "Contracts relating to Goods," "Copyright," "Patents," "Ships," "Mortmain," "Limitations," "Fines and Recoveries," "Judgments," "Wills," &c. The consequence of putting the statute-book into systematic order, and keeping it so, would be, that every amendment of the law, instead of being partial, as it now invariably is, would be necessarily extended and adopted to the full extent of the principle involved in it.

For these reasons we utterly dissent from Mr. Ker's proposal, and deny his assertion that a more scientific plan would fail in practice. Whether the present commissioners, or any of them, are or is competent to devise and carry into effect a rational and complete arrangement of the statute law, is a question with which we have nothing to do; but we are quite certain that the task is not beyond the power of any lawyer who has been trained to habits of accurate analysis, and that when it is performed the result will be far more intelligible to the Legislature and to the public than any consolidation bill that has yet been prepared or is likely to be prepared on Mr. Ker's plan. Let the Government only offer a prize of 1000*l.*, and the prospect of a commissionership, for the best analysis of the existing statute law, and we will promise them the agreeable dilemma of having to choose between a dozen analyses, all undeniably sufficient and complete, identical in every essential—differing only in unimportant particulars of terminology and style. The thing is as easy and certain as any operation in the mathematics.

212<sup>d</sup> SAFES.—MILNERS' HOLDFASTS, fire-resisting by means of the only perfect non-conductor, vaporisation, are the strongest, best, and cheapest, because the only effectual safeguards against fire, robbery, or violence, for ledgers, deeds, cash, or valuables. Lord Chief Justice Campbell, in summing up on the late trials for infringement of Milners' Safes, was pleased to observe:—"He must say he had been astonished to find such strong evidence of their usefulness; up to this hour he had no idea that there were any human means of so effectually preserving papers from the action of fire. It was a comfort for one to know that there was such an invention, by which valuable documents might be rendered secure, notwithstanding the calamity of fire." As to whether it is useful, it appears to be allowed on all hands; it seems to be a most marvellous preservative against fire, for the water remains permanently held in artificial or natural vessels; and the very calamity brings the cure, for the heat releases the water or moisture, and then it is turned into steam, and the steam moistens the substance that is to be preserved, and so it is an effectual guard against fire.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 25, 1854.

THERE appears to be something in the mere act of sitting down to draw an act of Parliament, destined to reform the law, which deprives men of their brains, and affects straightforward, clear-headed men with a compound of subtlety and blindness, productive of the most finished incapacity for clearness. There are two striking instances of this in what is termed the Chancery Improvement Act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86. The first arises on the 53rd section of the act; the second on the 31st.

There cannot be much doubt that the learned and able persons (that is, learned and able till they paralysed themselves by attempting to draw an act) who, in substance, framed the act, meant to get rid as much as possible of all the nice distinctions arising about supplemental matter purely, and supplemental matter in the nature of original matter, &c.; in fact, of all the worse than useless learning which, while it ornamented the pages of Lord Redesdale, puzzled both the Bench and the Bar, and punished the suitors in their tenderest affections; and one would not have thought the task very difficult. However, it turns out that it was very difficult. At any rate, the sort of parliamentary chloroform, which apparently emanates from a sheet of paper the moment it is destined to be the recipient of a draft act, so far mystified the learned persons who drew that 53rd clause, that it turns out that supplemental bills, and much of the venerable learning attached to them, subsist and flourish in despite of the rude hand of the reformer; and that there may yet, perhaps, be demurrers, because bills, not strictly original, are yet not the precise kind of bills that they should be. It has now been decided, according to the unanimous opinion of all the judges, that the 53rd section does not apply after decree; and does not apply before decree for the purpose of bringing new parties before the Court, but only for bringing forward new facts between the same parties. So that in innumerable instances supplemental bills will still be necessary. Of course every defect, which before could exist in a supplemental bill, may now exist. In fact, therefore, instead of being better off, we are even worse off under the act than before. We have two classes of difficulties—those attending the question when a supplemental statement is proper; and those attending supplemental bills when thrown back upon them.

The next specimen of the perplexed state of mind into which men, otherwise, as we have said, clear-headed, get when they attempt to draw law acts of Parliament, arises out of the 31st section, which directs, that when evidence is taken orally, it shall be taken in the manner practised in courts of common law when a witness is going abroad, and is not expected to return before the trial. Now, upon this section, the question recently came before the Court of Chancery*, whether, when a witness is examined orally before the examiner, and one party puts into his hand a written document, and asks him merely to prove the handwriting, without putting any other question whatever, the counsel on the other side may then require to see the document. The Court very naturally looked to the act, and finding a direction to act according to a particular practice at common law, also very naturally inquired what that practice was. It then turned out, that although, of course, the practice at a Nisi Prius trial, is perfectly well known, no trace of any special practice under a commission at common law, could be found in the books. Phillips, Starkie, and Taylor were alike silent, and no reported case could be found. Counsel on the one side informed the Court, that he was informed by competent common-law counsel that the practice at common law was different under a commission, from what it was at Nisi Prius. Of course, counsel on the other side was informed, on equally good authority, that it was the same.

Now, if the authors of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, had been drawing anything but an act of Parliament, they would have referred to some well-known practice, and either directed it to be rigidly followed, or pointed out the exceptions. But, in drawing an act of Parliament, so plain a course was too much for human nature; and accordingly they pass by the practice at Nisi Prius, as well known as our legal A B C, and they hunt out a lex non scripta—a practice buried in the bosoms of ephemeral commissioners, of which neither text-writers nor anybody else seem to know anything positively; and in this difficulty have they placed Courts of equity. How they will get out of the difficulty remains to be seen†; but it is plain that difficulty there need have been none, if the parliamentary draftsman would only have been satisfied to be simple, and to have referred to some well-known practice, with or without qualification.

THE Westminster Improvement Bonds being frequently advertised for sale, by auction and otherwise, and the advice of lawyers rather than of stockbrokers being likely to be asked about investing money in them, it may be not altogether useless to mention one or two points which appear not impossible to arise respecting them.

There are three acts of Parliament authorising the "improvements," and empowering the commissioners to borrow money. These acts contain many strange things, but nothing will be at present noticed except the powers of borrowing, and securing the monies borrowed. The acts are the Westminster Improvement Act, 1845, (8 & 9 Vict. c. clxxviii), the same, 1847, (10 & 11 Vict. c. cxxxi), and the same, 1850, (13 & 14 Vict. c. cii); and the general purpose is the making of Victoria-street, and some other streets immediately contiguous to it. By the 37th section of the first act the commissioners are empowered "from time to time to borrow at interest any sum of money which they shall judge necessary for the purposes of this act; and for securing the repayment of the monies so borrowed, with interest, the commissioners, or any three of them, may mortgage the lands or funds acquired, or to be acquired, by them by virtue of this act, . . . or may secure the same by bond duly stamped." Sect. 38 refers to a form of mortgage in the schedule to the act; and sect. 40 directs the commissioners to keep a register of all mortgages and bonds, which is to be open to the inspection of parties interested.

The commissioners have powers to purchase the property required for the new streets, and by sect. 81 are empowered to lease such of the purchased lands as are not required for making the streets, "either at a rent, or without any rent," and "may, if they think fit, accept and take any fine for the granting thereof." By sect. 82 the commissioners are to sell the ground-rents and reversions; "and the commissioners shall, at the request, costs, and charges of the purchasers of the same premises respectively, upon payment of the money agreed to be given for the same respectively to the commissioners, by deed under the hands of any three commissioners, convey and assign the land so purchased by such purchasers respectively, together with the houses, erections, and buildings then erected and built, or to be erected and built, thereon respectively, and the fee-simple and inheritance thereof, with the appurtenances, to such purchasers respectively, their heirs and assigns respectively, or as they respectively shall in that behalf order or direct, free from all incumbrances, (except the building leases or agreements to be granted thereof by virtue of this act)." By sect. 84, after conveyances or leases shall be executed, the property shall be held "discharged from all mortgages or other charges previously made by the commissioners, without the mortgagees or other parties entitled to such charges concurring in the conveyance or lease;" but the purchase money is to be liable to the existing mortgages and charges on the land for which it is paid.

By the second act, sect. 50, a reference is made to the schedule for the form of a bond, and the proviso at the end of it is material, being in these words—"Provided always, that the lands, tenements, money, property, and effects of the said commissioners to be acquired under or for the purposes of the said act, or either of them, shall alone be answerable to pay and satisfy the principal sum and interest secured by the before-written bond, and that the commissioners shall not in any case be personally liable to pay the same principal and interest, or any part thereof."

The mortgage in the schedule to the first act is simply that the commissioners "grant and assign unto A. B, his executors, administrators, and assigns, all &c., to hold &c. from this day until the said sum of £—, with interest, &c., shall be fully paid and satisfied."

By the third act, sect. 18, the commissioners are authorised to mortgage, with powers of sale, and to confirm powers of sale contained in, or to add such to, previces mortgages; and sect. 19 confirms all previous powers of sale. Sect. 20 authorises mortgages to be given in addition to existing bonds, and bonds in addition to existing mortgages, and future borrowings to be secured both ways.

* Lord v. Colbin, before Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C.

† This was written and printed before the decision of the Lords Justices in the same matter on the 23rd instant. Their Lordships appear rather to have passed by, than got over, the difficulty.

It will be observed, first, that there is no limit to the amount which may be borrowed; secondly, that money may be secured by mortgage or by bond, or by both; thirdly, that in no case are the commissioners personally responsible; fourthly, that the bonds are declared to be charges on the property to be acquired by the commissioners under the act; and, fifthly, that such charges are declared by statute.

Such being the circumstances, what are the rights of the bondholders in relation to the mortgagees and to each other?

If the bonds are to be considered as really charges upon the property of the commissioners, then it would seem that the maxim "qui prior est in tempore, potior est in jure" will apply, and an early bond will have priority over subsequent bonds, and also over subsequent mortgages; and in such case the value of a bond might depend upon its date, and the value of a mortgage upon the amount of bonds existing at its execution. A bond would be in substance a mortgage of the whole property of the commissioners.

On the other hand, if the obtaining the legal estate by mortgage is to be held as giving priority to then existing bonds, the consequence is obvious, that all the property might be mortgaged, and so the bondholders have a charge upon nothing.

The statutes, and particularly the 20th section of the act of 1856, treat the mortgage and the bond as securities of a different nature; and so it would rather appear that the mortgages have preference to the bonds.

The commissioners may have ample funds for payment of everybody, and in that case no difficulty will arise; but in the event of the property not selling to advantage, and any deficiency occurring, the preceding observations shew that there may be a question as to the parties to bear the loss.

CASUS OMISSUS IN THE SUCCESSION DUTY ACT.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—Sect. 23 of the act 16 & 17 Vict. c. 51, provides, that where timber, &c. shall be comprised in any succession, the successor shall be chargeable with duty upon his interest in the net monies which shall from time to time be received from any sales of such timber, if such monies exceed 10*l.* yearly. The statute appears to me only to provide for the case of timber being felled for immediate sale; but what is to be done where the owner of such timber manufactures it himself, and sells it as a manufactured article; e. g. where the owner of the timber saws it in his own saw-mill, and sells the planks? Where timber devolves on a carpenter, machine-maker, or shipbuilder, and is used by him for the purposes of his trade, surely the duty cannot be charged on the amount received on the manufactured article; yet no provision is made for assessing it otherwise. So, where the successor to timber fells it, and stacks it in his own timber-yard till it is properly seasoned for immediate use, and then sells it, is he to be charged on the improved value? The omission in the act is doubtless attributable to the clause in question having been inserted at the last moment in the House of Commons.

Your obedient servant,

Lincoln's Inn, Jan. 23, 1854.

212<sup>d</sup> SAFES.—MILNERS' HOLDFASTS, fire-resisting by means of the only perfect non-conductor, vaporisation, are the strongest, best, and cheapest, because the only effectual safeguards against fire, robbery, or violence, for ledgers, deeds, cash, or valuables. Lord Chief Justice Campbell, in summing up on the late trials for infringement of Milners' Safes, was pleased to observe:—"He must say he had been astonished to find such strong evidence of their usefulness; up to this hour he had no idea that there were any human means of so effectually preserving papers from the action of fire. It was a comfort for one to know that there was such an invention, by which valuable documents might be rendered secure, notwithstanding the calamity of fire." As to whether it is useful, it appears to be allowed on all hands; it seems to be a most marvellous preservative against fire, for the water remains permanently held in artificial or natural vessels; and the very calamity brings the cure, for the heat releases the water or moisture, and then it is turned into steam, and the steam moistens the substance that is to be preserved, and so it is an effectual guard against fire.

LONDON, MARCH 4, 1854.

OUR last review of criminal cases was in October last*, and since that period several important decisions have proceeded from the Court for Crown Cases Reserved.

Confession.—The nature of the threat or inducement, and of the authority of the person using it, has been again considered in two recent cases. In one, (Reg. v. Sleeman, 17 Jur., part 1, p. 1082), a daughter of the prosecutor, (the prisoner's master), but who did not live with her father, and was not the prisoner's mistress, whilst she had temporary charge of the prisoner, who had been previously taken into custody, said to her, "I am very sorry for you: you ought to have known better. Tell me the truth, whether you did it or no. . . . Do not run your soul into more sin, but tell the truth;" when the prisoner made a full confession. The Court held that there was no threat or inducement held out to the prisoner, and that the confession was not made to a person in authority. In the other case, (Reg. v. Luckhurst, 17 Jur., part 1, p. 1082), a person, in the presence of the prosecutor, threatened to give the prisoner into custody unless he told him "what business he had" in a stable, (where the offence was alleged to have been committed); and in a subsequent part of the same conversation stated the nature of his suspicions, when the prisoner confessed. The confession was held to be inadmissible in evidence, although at the time when the threat was made the nature of the charge had not been stated. Before he made the confession, however, he had been told, in the presence of the prosecutor, what the charge was. The person using the threat was not a person in authority, but the prosecutor being present, it was the same as if he had used the threat himself.

Embezzlement.—(See Larceny).

False Pretences.—(See Larceny).—In order to constitute the offence of obtaining money, &c. under false pretence, the "obtaining" must be in accordance with the wish, or for the advantage, or for the purpose of effecting some object of the party making the false pretence. Thus, where the defendant had fraudulently altered the amount of a letter of credit on a bank, and obtained large sums of money thereon, for which he had given drafts on the bank referring to the letter, and the drafts were presented, but not paid, the defendant was convicted of having attempted to obtain money from the bank by false pretences; but although the jury found that he meant the drafts to be presented, and the money paid thereon, the Court held, that if the money had actually been obtained, it would not have been an offence within stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, inasmuch as, so far from the defendant desiring that the drafts should be presented, he would have been better pleased if they had been destroyed, he having already received the money for them. If the drafts had been honoured, they said, it was not shewn that the defendant would have received the money; he would not have obtained it himself, nor by his agent; and the jury must be taken to have found that the defendant merely foresaw that the drafts would be presented. (Reg. v. Garrett, 17 Jur., part 1, p. 1060). In this case one of the objections taken was, that the prisoner, being at St. Petersburg when he passed off the letter of credit and when the drafts were presented in London, had committed no offence in this country; but the Court were clearly of opinion that "if a man employ a conscious or unconscious agent to commit an offence in this country, he is amenable to the laws of England, although at the time that the offence was committed he was living beyond the jurisdiction."

Upon a charge of obtaining money by false pretences, it is sufficient if the actual substantial pretence, which was the main inducement to part from the money, he alleged and proved, although it may be shewn in evidence that other matters in some measure operated upon the mind of the prosecutor as an inducement for him to part from his money. (Reg. v. Hewgill, 18 Jur., part 1, p. 158).

Forgery—Order for the Payment of Money.—To constitute the offence of forging an order for the payment of money, within the stat. 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 66, it is not necessary that the name of the party to whom it is addressed should appear upon the face of the order itself. The direction may be shewn by extrinsic evidence; as, for instance, by taking and presenting it to a party for payment. Thus, where the prisoner called at a bank, and said that she had been told by Mr. Ramsay that she was to have the sum of 800*l.* if she called for it; being told that his order was necessary, she went away, and returned, presenting a forged document, beginning, "Sirs, please to pay" &c. The names of the bankers did not appear on any part of the document; but their clerk said, if he had known that Mr. Ramsay had signed it, he should have paid it; and it was held, that she was properly convicted of forging an order within the statute. (Reg. v. Snelling, 17 Jur., part 1, p. 1012). It was said by the Court, that the putting a mere signature to a bill may be shewn to amount to a receipt, although in itself it is no receipt, except as explained by usage; (and see, as to this point, Reg. v. Overton, post); and a request to deliver goods, although no request on the face of it, may be shewn by evidence to be one; that the same rule is applicable to orders for the payment of money; and that if the order had been genuine, and paid, it would have operated as a discharge to the bankers in respect of the payment. Parke, B., seemed to think that it might be an order within the statute independently of the prisoner's conduct in shewing to whom it was addressed. The case of Rex v. Clinch, (2 East's P. C. 938), in which it was held that an order to deliver goods must be directed to the holder of or person interested in the goods, if not overruled, was held to be no longer applicable, since the change in the law not requiring the instrument to be set out in the indictment.

The prisoner was indicted for forging a testimonial to his character as a schoolmaster, and other counts of the indictment charged him with having uttered the forged document. The jury acquitted him of the forging, but found him guilty of the uttering with intent to obtain the emoluments of the office, and to deceive the prosecutor. The facts so found were held to constitute an offence at common law, of which the prisoner was properly convicted. (Reg. v. Sharman, 18 Jur., part 1, p. 157).

Larceny.—Illustrations of the extreme subtlety prevailing in that portion of our criminal law which relates to larceny and embezzlement have been afforded in the following cases:—In Reg. v. Reid, (18 Jur., part 1, p. 66), the Court, after two arguments, and much time taken to consider, decided that the prisoner was guilty of larceny, and not embezzlement, under the following circumstances:—He had been sent with his master's cart for some coals, which were delivered to him, and deposited in the cart, their price being entered to the master's account. On the road home the prisoner disposed of a portion of the coals. The ground on which the judgment proceeded was, that the prisoner had determined his exclusive possession of the coals when they were deposited in the cart; and from that time, and therefore at the time of taking, the possession was in the master. The Court considered that direct authority was to be found for their decision in Spears's case, (2 East's P. C. 568; 2 Leach's C. C. 825), especially as it is reported in the Black Book, v. 2, pp. 182, 183, which contains the decisions in Crown cases, and is deposited with the Chief Justice for the time being.

In Reg. v. Beaumont (18 Jur., part 1, p. 159) the facts were as follow:—W. had contracted with a railway company to provide horses and carmen for the delivery of the company's coals, and for "collecting, receiving, and duly accounting for the monies received for the same;" such carmen were to obey the orders of the company's manager in all things connected with the delivery of the coals, and "receipt and payment of monies" received by them, and W. or the carmen were daily "well and truly to pay, account for, and deliver to the said company's manager all cheques, monies," &c. which they might receive in payment of the coals. The course of business was for the carmen to receive delivery notes and receipted invoices from the company's office. The former they took to W. for the purpose of being entered in his books, but the invoices were left with the customer on payment of the account. The prisoner was a carman of W., and the case found that it was his duty to pay over direct to the company's clerks any money he received for coals. He, however, having delivered coals to a customer, received the money, and appropriated it to his own use, and was then indicted for embezzling the money of W., his master. It was held, by a majority of the judges, that there was a privity between the prisoner and the company, so as to make him their agent; that he agreed to pay the money to them, and therefore had not received it on account of W., and was wrongly convicted of embezzling his money.

The prosecutor gave some marked money to a friend to expend at his (the prosecutor's) shop, for the purpose of detecting a servant whom the master suspected; and the servant having received the money, it was found in his box, instead of in the till, where it was his duty to have put it. The jury having convicted him of embezzlement, the Court upheld the conviction. (Reg. v. Gill, 18 Jur., part 1, p. 70). The objection was, that it was the master's own money at the time of the receipt of it, and therefore the offence was larceny; but the Court held otherwise, upon the authority of Rex v. Headge, (2 Leach's C. C. 1033).

A prisoner was convicted of larceny on these facts. It was his duty, as bailiff to the prosecutor, to pay and receive monies. Upon an account thereof rendered, it appeared that he had charged his master with larger payments than had been actually made, and had thereby obtained more money than was actually due to him. The Court held that the offence, if any, was obtaining money under false pretences. (Reg. v. Green, 18 Jur., part 1, p. 168).

By the interpretation clause (sect. 47) of the stat. 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 36, relating to offences against the Post-office, the expression "person employed by or under the Post-office" is to include "every person employed in any business of the Post-office." The prisoner was employed as a letter-carrier from A. to B., such employment being complete upon delivery of the letters at B. Upon one occasion, at the request of the postmaster at B., the prisoner assisted in sorting the letters at that place, and while so engaged stole one of the letters containing money. It was contended, that as this was not an ordinary or official, but merely a casual, employment, the prisoner did not come within the definition; but the Court held that he was properly convicted. (Reg. v. Reason, 17 Jur., part 1, p. 1014).

The proof of the corpus delicti in larceny was lately considered. The prisoner was found coming out of a warehouse, where a large quantity of pepper was kept, with pepper of a similar quality in his pocket. He had no right to be in the warehouse, and on being discovered said, "I hope you will not be hard with me," and took some pepper out of his pocket and threw it upon the ground. There was no evidence of any pepper having been missed from the bulk. It was objected that the prosecutor had failed to make out his case, and had not thrown upon the prisoner the onus of answering it, according to the maxim of the civil law, "Ei incumbit probatio, qui dicit, non qui negat." (Cod., lib. 2, tit. 1, l. 4; and see Dig., lib. 22, tit. 3, l. 2). The Court, however, held that there was sufficient evidence of the corpus delicti to go to the jury. (Reg. v. Burton, 18 Jur., part 1, p. 167*).

Night Offences.—By stat. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, s. 1, "if any person shall be found by night armed with any dangerous or offensive weapon, with intent to break or enter any dwelling-house, &c., and to commit felony therein; or if any person shall be found by night having in his possession, without lawful excuse, (the proof of which excuse shall lie on such person), any picklock, &c., or other implement of housebreaking; or if any person shall be found by night having his face blackened or otherwise disguised, with intent to commit a felony," &c. It has been decided that an intent to commit felony forms no ingredient in the above offence of being found by night with housebreaking instruments without lawful excuse, and therefore that an indictment omitting such averment is good. (Reg. v. Bailey, 17 Jur., part 1, p. 1106).

Perjury.—A Master Extraordinary in Chancery has no power to administer oaths in matters before the Court of Admiralty. It was therefore held, that a conviction for perjury in an affidavit so sworn, but used in the Court of Admiralty, could not be supported. (Reg. v. Stone, 17 Jur., part 1, p. 1106). It was said that the practice to receive such affidavits was as old as the Court of Chancery itself, which had a jurisdiction in matters within the Admiralty. Lord Campbell stated that in ancient times the Lord Chancellor issued letters of marque and reprisal. The Masters Extraordinary had also an old date assigned to them. Fleta (A. D. 1340) speaks of "clerici honesti," and Lord Campbell said they had existed from the time of the Anglo-Saxons, and that they were members of the Wittenagemote.

Practice.—The important question, how far a verdict delivered by mistake may be amended in a reasonable time, was discussed in a recent case. (Reg. v. Voddan, 17 Jur., part 1, p. 1014). One of the jury pronounced a verdict of "not guilty," which was entered by the clerk of the peace, and the prisoner was discharged out of the dock, when other jurymen interfered, and said their verdict was "guilty;" whereupon the prisoner was brought back, and the jury were again asked for their verdict, when they all said it was "guilty," and that they had been and were unanimous. The verdict was amended, and the Court held properly so, and that the conviction must stand. It had been previously held (Reg. v. Parkin, 1 Moo. C. C. 45) that a verdict, having been recorded, might be amended, where the jury a few minutes afterwards expressed their dissent.

Stamp.—Two very important cases have been decided upon the stamp laws, which now seem to be applied without question to criminal cases, but our space will not permit of our doing more than merely referring to them. In one (Reg. v. Overton, 18 Jur., part 1, p. 134) it was held, that a document, not purporting on the face of it to be a receipt for the payment of money, may be shewn to be one by evidence aliunde, and thus be brought within the stamp laws; and if it does require a stamp, and is unstamped, it cannot be given in evidence merely for the purpose of identifying the prisoner, if it also proves a material fact against him, e. g. the receipt of the money on a charge of embezzlement. In such a case the proper course is to shew that the money was paid to the party who signed the paper or book, and then to prove and put in only the signature. In the other, (Reg. v. Watts, to be reported in part 1 of our next number), an unstamped agreement was held (Parke, B., dissenting) to be within the rule of common law which prevents choses in action from being the subject of larceny.

Reviews.

Observations of a Solicitor on the Right of the Public to form Limited-liability Partnerships, and on the Theory, Practice, and Cost of Commercial Charters. By EDWIN WILKINS FIELD. 8vo. Pp. 96.

[Longman.]

OUR law of partnership requires great amendment in many particulars, but there is little hope of any useful alteration being made while the inconsiderate cry for limited liability is kept up, in connexion with complaints of defects in the law, which have nothing to do with limited liability. In these observations we shall confine ourselves strictly to that subject, and principally with reference to Mr. Field's pamphlet, though it does not include, or profess to include, the whole case in favour of limited liability*.

Mr. Field's pamphlet is his answer to the questions circulated by the Mercantile Law Commissioners. He complains that those questions include points of pure economical science, which are outside any present legitimate investigation—such, for instance, as the inquiry whether legislative acts can afford undue facilities for the creation of unwholesome competition—questions which were included, and altogether disposed of, in the settlement of the general question of free trade; and in another place he insists on the laissez faire principle of commercial legislation as a thing absolutely settled, and not to be opened. But all that was settled, either in economical science or in legislation, in respect of the free-trade question, was, that native growers and manufacturers have no right to confine native consumers to the home market; and the so-called laissez faire principle is obviously no scientific principle, but merely a statistical fact, that the history of legislation here and abroad affords many instances of interference in cases where the parties intended to be benefited would have done much better for themselves. It is not yet a settled principle that Government should leave people to take care of themselves in every particular. There are still economists who think that the law should interfere to prevent gambling and fraud, and to enforce executory contracts; but the expediency of interfering with mercantile transactions is denied. Be it so. But what if commerce is apt to slide insensibly into gambling and fraud? Is "undue" speculation with borrowed capital a purely mercantile transaction? Is the getting together of a flock of subscribers by means of a delusive prospectus, reports of "eminent scientific men," &c., and then using their capital as a means of attracting credit, and spending the whole upon a staff of lawyers, officers, and engineers, a mercantile transaction? We must leave the term "laissez faire" to its legitimate use, as a convenient expression, and inquire in each case what is right to be done. Mr. Field protests against what he calls "the empirical method of inquiry almost invariably pursued by commissioners." "To ascertain any scientific truth, (and I need not say that the question before us is a purely scientific one, containing a solution true for all people and times*, if we can arrive at it), it is a very unscientific way to ask the opinion of A., B., C., D., &c., and out of the average of their notions to think you get the truth required." Setting aside the large class of commissions issued with a view to the defending, continuing, or creating of jobs, commissioners of inquiry do not proceed in the way described by Mr. Field. Their commission assumes that the truth required is not to be found settled past dispute in a chapter of Mill, or elsewhere. It does not assume that the commissioners understand the subject better than the rest of the world, or that they are the most competent persons to collect particulars, make observations, and go through the process of induction or analysis, as the case may require, from the beginning. If it did, commissions would seldom be issued to members of Parliament. It is not for their skill in such operations that men are sent there. The commissioners are selected for their general intelligence and impartiality: they are asked, not to fancy themselves Adam Smiths or Bentham, but to procure information from all who are likely to have thought and observed on the subject with effect. The abilities of the commissioners may give value to their report, but the main object of the commission is generally the appendix of evidence and information.

* The rules relating to the important subject of proof of the corpus delicti in different cases are accurately stated and clearly illustrated in Mr. Best's Principles of Evidence, pp. 546—515, 2nd ed.

* See the well-written article on the subject in the Westminster Review for October, 1853, and a recent pamphlet by Mr. W. Ffooks, "The Law of Partnership an Obstacle to Social Progress."

By our law a debtor is under unlimited liability to pay the debt, unless the creditor has agreed to a limitation of the liability.

When the profits of a business are shared by several persons, all are, in questions between them and the creditors of the business, considered as partners, whether their interest was known to the creditor at the time of giving credit or not.

Every partner, whether secret or avowed, is considered to give to the persons who are publicly recognised as carrying on the business authority to contract on behalf of the firm all such engagements as are usually or reasonably necessary for the purpose. But any restriction placed on this implied power, by agreement between the partners, is binding on creditors who become such with notice of the agreement, and credit given to a dormant partner contrary to the intent of the partnership agreement would not generally be binding on the firm. Thus a private shareholder in a joint-stock company has no power to bind the firm.

Every partner is liable for the whole of the partnership debts duly contracted as above, except where his liability has been limited by special contract with the creditor, (as is common in insurance contracts), by a general notice which the creditor is bound to regard, (as by a clause in the registered settlement deed of a joint-stock company, if the doctrine in The Sea Fire and Life Insurance Company, 18 Jur., part 1, p. 118, is correct), or by charter or act of Parliament.

What are called cost-book partnerships in mines are frequently instanced as customary exceptions to the general law of unlimited liability; but the only legal peculiarity of cost-book associations is, that they are expressly excepted from the operation of the act for the registration of joint-stock companies. If two tenants in common of a farm agree to cultivate it at their joint expense, and to divide the profits, neither of them is answerable for any debt contracted by the other for the purposes of the farm, unless he has given an express or general authority, or by his conduct has entitled the creditor to imply such authority. There is no general presumption that a farming business is conducted on credit. For the same reason the manager of a joint adventure in a mine, whether worked on the cost-book principle or not, has no implied authority to contract debts. A mine is presumed to be a ready-money concern; and even debts contracted by the manager of a registered joint-stock mining company would not bind the shareholders, if the deed of settlement gave the manager no authority to contract debts.

Partnership in an undertaking which can be carried on without credit may be created without binding the partners beyond the engaged capital. This consideration answers most of the alleged examples of our law's discouragement of useful undertakings, such as lodgings for the poor, gas companies, water-works, &c. No doubt the law does a little obstruct the proceedings of those speculative gentlemen who for their own ends are always ready to provide a popular want or sentiment with the corporeal tenement of a joint-stock company. But no charter or limitation of liability is necessary for the making of a lodging-house, or a hundred lodging-houses, of gas-works, or water-works, or any other undertaking of the like nature, which, as it requires no credit, needs never involve any liabilities beyond those distinctly provided for at the outset, and may be effected without authorising any person to trade on the account of the promoters. Mr. Neale's case of a lodging-house building society, chartered at the cost of 1400*l.*, is the favourite instance to the contrary; but no practical man believes that that charter was wanted by any one except the lawyers concerned. A deed now before us, for establishing a similar association, provides completely for every object without even creating a partnership, and of course without exposing the subscribers to liability beyond their subscriptions. Gas companies are almost invariably established with unlimited liability, and the fear of it has never yet kept a town in darkness. A charter or an act is not thought of, unless the undertaking is so large as to entitle the solicitor in courtesy to such a perquisite, or powers are required to break up highways, &c.

Such being the state of the law, it is proposed that the members of a firm should be allowed to limit their liability, by a public intimation annexed to the name or the register of the partnership. What is most generally asked is the legalisation of partnerships en commandite, with the rule, that the active partners, and also every dormant partner who interferes in the management, should be fully liable. Mr. Field, however, considers that all the partners should be on the same footing with respect to liability, and asks that any two or more traders—nay, that any sole trader—shall be at liberty to announce to the world, with effect, that only a certain capital is pledged for the payment of the trade debts. Our law does not say that this shall not be done, but it lends no special help to the doing of it in ordinary cases. Whoever thinks fit to make such an announcement is entitled to the benefit of it as against those whom he can fix with notice. If Sir J. Stuart, V. C., rightly held in the case of The Sea Fire and Life Insurance Company, (18 Jur., part 1, p. 118), that notice of the registered settlement deed of a joint-stock company is notice of the contents of the deed to all persons dealing with the company, the law has already conceded all that is asked with respect to joint-stock companies; and unless Mr. Field desires that in other cases those also shall be bound whom the announcement never in fact reached, we do not know what more he wants. It seems, then, that Mr. Field is saying to the Legislature, not “laissez faire,” but “interfere.”

The advocates of limited liability say that it is unjust and tyrannical to hinder a man from employing part of his capital in trade without becoming liable for all the trade debts. It seems to us a perfectly reasonable rule. It is reasonable that a trader should be liable for his debts in solido. He may make a different contract with his creditor if he can; but when he asks the State to contrive machinery to assist him in making what prima facie is an unreasonable arrangement, he must give better reasons than we have yet heard for the application.

Interest is the return due to capital for its use, including also, in the common meaning of the term, insurance where the capital is risked, though that is rather to be reckoned as the profits of the trade of lending money. Profits are the returns, beyond interest on capital and insurance, due to sagacity, skill, prudence, honesty, industry, and enterprise. The object of legislation should be to encourage the exercise of those qualities wherever they exist. Those who have capital, and do not possess or exercise the faculties necessary to turn it to account, have no claim to share in the reward of their exercise by others. The idle capitalist should be content to circulate his capital through the channels of the 3l. per cents. and mortgages. Even discounts are beyond his sphere. We are told that limited liability is necessary to protect small capitalists from the competition of large capitalists. This is the fallacy of changing the terms. There is no competition between large and small capitalists, to the peculiar detriment of the latter. On the contrary, the interest on small loans, like the rents of small houses, is always at the highest rate. If the small capitalist, seeking to eke out his interest with a share of the profits which he does not earn, finds that he must accept the risks incident to the pursuit of profits, he is not wronged. The real sufferer is the man who, possessing mercantile abilities with little capital, is prevented from exercising them by the competition of those who use both abilities and wealth. He would have reason to complain if the encouragement of mandatory partnerships superadded the competition of mere brute capital, and made his rise from the rank of clerk or gérant still more hopeless.

Mr. Field says that there are cheap capitals and dear capitals, and that unlimited liability makes capital dear by raising the risk. The risk incident to the adventure per se cannot be affected by the law of partnership; and any difference of risk in favour of a limited liability must arise either from the risk being shifted from the debtors to the creditors, (who in their dealings will charge an equivalent insurance), or from the risk being actually diminished by the limited system, or from both causes. Mr. Field relies only on the second, insisting that our law repels prudent capitalists, who would exercise a wholesome control, and leaves the field free to those who are reckless. The proposition does not look well in an a priori view. Effective control, whether with limited or with unlimited liability, can only be exercised by one who advances a considerable proportion of capital—so much, that, being by the hypothesis prudent, he would not venture it if he thought there was any chance of the losses absorbing the whole. The chance of their exceeding the amount of the capital put in would, a fortiori, prevent his undertaking even the limited liability. Mr. Field's first instance is that of undertakings requiring a large capital to be raised by companies. “By saying that all such combinations shall be on the unlimited-liability principle, the law interposes an obstacle of risk which at once makes all capitalists embarking require great returns—which, in other words, excludes the public from the benefit of cheap capital in their undertakings.” “Cheap capital” means small profits; and as the rate of profits is not regulated by the capitalist's notion of what is an adequate return, but by the laws of demand and supply, (being always as much as he can get), the proposition amounts to this—that the risk in question either prevents a particular undertaking altogether, because the expected profits would be too small, or prevents the establishment of competing companies, and thereby enables one to enjoy a monopoly and high profits. There is no other possible mode of excluding “cheap capital.” Mr. Field, therefore, asserts, that in this country, first, useful undertakings are checked by the difficulty of procuring subscribers to them with unlimited liability; and, secondly, successful undertakings, not being legally monopolies, become so practically from the absence of competition—assertions which are notoriously contrary to experience. In every mercantile country a glut of capital, followed by wild speculation, ending in a panic, occurs periodically, like the return of a comet. It is commonly said that the period in England is seven years, in America four years. A people whose ordinary mercantile transactions are so frequently deranged by panics can have no reason to complain of the discouragement of wholesome enterprise. If capital is found for wild speculations, while there is not enough for prudent ones, it is the fault of the public judgment, not of the law.

Mr. Field's next objection to unlimited liability is, that it creates middlemen, whose profits must be charged to the public. “These middlemen are bankers, bill brokers, merchants, and others, who live on diffusing (virtually on del credere commission) capital, from the cautious lender to the most wildly speculative borrower;” so that, after all, the cautious lender does contribute capital to wild speculations—capital dear to the speculator, but not dear to the public. This is all that Mr. Field says on that head. If he had only paused a little before flying off to another topic, he might have discovered the fallacy of all the objections to the law founded on its assumed interference with the free employment of capital, and he might also have thought of consulting Mr. Mill, who, we presume, agrees with other economists in regarding bankers, bill brokers, merchants, and the whole class of mercantile middlemen, as the means, and the only possible means, of keeping commerce, credit, and speculation in a healthy state. Not to mention that without this police of middlemen the honest and prudent trader would be undistinguishable from, and have no advantage over, the knavish or foolish adventurer, Mr. Field has only to recall his Anti-Corn-law rudiments to perceive how much more frequent, violent, and disastrous the fluctuations in the supply of capital would be if it were not regulated by a class of men performing the same service in the money market that the corn merchants do in Mark-lane.

Next, the law of partnership overstocks certain trades.

But as neither explanation nor example is given, we pass to its effect on the relation of master and workman, illustrated, of course, by the contrasted example of Lowell. We almost doubt Mr. Field's candour when we find him adopting this puerility. In an under-peopled and improving country the bodily and mental faculties alone of an intelligent labourer are capital of no inconsiderable value, giving him the means and the desire to rise to a higher grade in society. The consequence is, that in America the classes of the employers and the employed melt insensibly into each other. Mr. Bancroft Davis, in his evidence before Mr. Slaney's committee of 1861, said, "I can hardly conceive of any other state of things in America. We are all working people there; and it is impossible for a gentleman who has not been there to comprehend the state of society. The differences in condition are much less marked than in Europe. There is less accumulated capital, and labour becomes capital more rapidly than in an older country. If there is any one thing that distinguishes the people in New England, it is that nobody is contented with his present condition; and that will account for a good many things which I cannot account for otherwise. Everybody is struggling for something better." (Pp. 823, 824). Is this a consequence of the law of limited liability? No. The state of society described by Mr. Davis existed before the American revolution; the law of limited liability was first enacted in New York in 1822, in Massachusetts in 1835, long after the New England States had become remarkable for their labouring partners. Mr. Wilkins, on whose authority Mr. Field relies, finds that the proportion of special partnerships to general partnerships and chartered companies is small. Mr. Gerard, a leading member of the New York Bar, says, "The proportion with us is small, as the American people are all men of business, and take an active part in all commercial pursuits." (Field, p. 77). We are afraid that the example of Massachusetts is not worth much. They have legalised mandatory partnerships, which they do not use; they are overrun with chartered companies, which every one condemns; (see the opinions of M.M. Troubat and Wolowski, cited by Mr. Field, p. 49); and they obstinately retain the usury laws, which they are continually evading.

It is pretended that our law discourages workmen from clubbing their savings in partnership, and masters from assisting skilful workmen to commence business. There is no truth in either statement. Unlimited liability cannot be a bugbear to one who has little capital, and puts all he has into one venture; and no country has yet been discovered in which masters shew a desire to help able workmen to set up for themselves. If the wish exists here, the relaxation of the usury laws affords ample opportunity for combining its gratification with that of self-interest.

"The law converts real partners into nominal creditors." The subject of credit is still the opprobrium both of science and of legislation. We do not pretend to have probed it to the bottom. But what is the difference, let us ask, between lending money at interest and selling goods on credit? If there is no distinction between the dormant partner sharing profits and the lender of money taking interest, then there is none between the dormant partner and the dealer supplying goods on credit at credit prices. But the differences in both cases are vital. One is this: if you agree to share profits, you agree, or ought to agree, to have some control, by way of check, at least, over the management. A creditor cannot have such control—a partner may. To trust a manager with more capital or more credit than belongs to his interest in the business tends to make him reckless, and it is expedient that they who trust him should be induced by an unlimited liability either to surround him at the outset with sufficient checks, or to reserve and exercise the right of continuous inspection and control. That is the ground and the justification of our law of unlimited liability. It is reasonable to insist, that if several persons join in a mercantile undertaking, not only shall all be liable collectively for the full amount of the joint debts, but each shall be induced to exercise at least some caution in the selection of his associates and agents, by being made a surety for them; and we think this requisition should be universal, extending to the entire prohibition of privileged trading companies. Experience is not in favour of companies. Even in the case of railways we are finding the advantage of substituting debenture holders for subscribers, and lessees for directors. No one who has compared the idleness and waste in a railway fitting shop with the activity and economy of a private engineer's establishment can believe that society has anything to gain from the encouragement of joint-stock companies. The discouragement of companies would not give an undue advantage to large capitalists. Trade could be carried on with borrowed capital, but instead of being mismanaged by directors or managers, owing their position to anything rather than their fitness for discharging its duties, it would be conducted by competent men, stimulated to the most energetic and prudent use of their faculties by their responsibility for the borrowed capital, and their interest in the entire surplus profits of the undertaking. Whether at any stage in the progress of a commercial people companies are useful as pioneers is a question we need not discuss. The opinion of most observing men is, that they are not needed in this country and at this time.

The law has interfered by limiting the effect of the general notices of carriers, by prohibiting general carriers from making special contracts for the carriage of goods, &c., and we think—the laissez faire "principle" notwithstanding—that it would act wisely in interfering in other cases. It is a delusion to say that these are interferences with private contracts. There is no contract at all in such cases. You take your passage by a railway train, and are told on the back of your ticket that the company will not engage to keep their time, or be responsible for your luggage. You must go; there is no other way; you accept the ticket. This is no contract: it is duress. And generally, when any mercantile undertaking is started, with a large capital and limited liability, those to whom it offers its custom are under duress to accept it, however much they may dislike the limit of liability; for when such associations are allowed, you must either deal with them, or retire from business in favour of others more adventurous. The reckless debtor thus creates the reckless trader. If we were to abolish the remedy for debts altogether, we should not destroy credit, but only vitiate it. With the Oxford dealers in non-necessaries a minor is a favourite customer.

The testimony of Mr. D. D. Field, of New York, and Professor Greenleaf, is cited in favour of the results of the law in America. This does not quite agree with what we have cited above from Mr. Wilkins; and we have heard a contrary opinion strongly expressed by very competent observers; and both in America and in France the proportion of reckless speculation to the amount of capital is notoriously far greater than in England.

Mr. Field sees mischiefs arising out of the conflict of our law with the laws of other countries. A good reason for extending the best law to every country which it will suit.

Mr. Field asserts that the statistics of failed unlimited-liability companies, as compared with those of failed liability companies, prove the expediency of the change; but, until he gives us the statistics, we shall be excused for doubting the fact. His authority, Mr. Troubat, is against him here. After stating that in France it was proposed by certain lawyers to correct the over-trading there attributed to the commandite system, by the substitution of incorporated companies with limited liability. Mr. Troubat says, (in a passage cited by Mr. Field), "Had those gentlemen come to the United States about the same time, we could have demonstrated to them, in the ruin of some scores of lean companies, savings funds societies, local companies, and banks, all exploded upon the principles they advocated in France, with acts of incorporation, the blessings to be obtained from the establishment of partnerships with nobody responsible" &c.

But, Mr. Field says, the popularity of limited-liability associations in the United States, and elsewhere where they are allowed, is an experimentum crucis in their favour. "What the world for itself finds best in a long run is commercially the best." Such an experimentum crucis would prove the utility of bubble companies, betting-houses, hells, and the like.

We heartily concur in all that Mr. Field says against the system of Board of Trade charters. It is a barbarous absurdity, and must soon be swept away; but with it we would also abolish every other mode of authorising participation in profits without solidité.

LONDON, MARCH 11, 1854.

THE Court of Chancery, formerly the most unpopular tribunal in the kingdom, has now so far relieved itself from the opprobrium of its immemorial abuses and oppressive exactions, that in many respects it is considered by competent authorities as a sort of model court, the procedure of which may be generally imitated with advantage to the suitors and the public. The causes which have brought about this happy change are sufficiently obvious: the credit is due, in the first instance, to the enlightened inquiries of the Chancery Commissioners, and, in the second place, to Lord St. Leonards, to whose experienced hands was intrusted the task of moulding into a simple and comprehensive system the reforms which the commissioners had sketched in outline. Some thirty years ago Lord Brougham declared that "no man, who ever put a forensic habit on his back, would think of advising a suit in equity to recover 50%, 80%, or 100%. Can there, then, be a greater libel upon the law of a country than to say that a man must be kept out of his right, because, if he sought it, the costs of the Court of Chancery will be his inevitable ruin?" If the noble and learned Lord were now to put the same question, the answer fortunately would be of a very different description; for, owing to the simplification of Chancery procedure, the reduction in expenses, and the increased judicial staff of the Court, the suitor has no longer any occasion to dread those "eternal gates," the terrors of which were so powerfully described by the same great authority. The business of the Court now flows on in one unimpeded stream, and that "fresh pasture, which is the sweetest," is always to be obtained both in the courts of the first instance and in the court of appeal; though, in reference to the latter tribunal, we may observe that it is somewhat unjust as well as anomalous; that the suitor has no certainty whether his case will be heard by the full Court, or by the two Lords Justices, or by the Chancellor sitting alone. If there be any advantage in having the opinion of three judges, or of two judges, instead of that of a single judge, the suitor should be entitled to claim this advantage as a right, instead of obtaining it, as he does now, as a mere matter of chance.

In confirmation of the present satisfactory state of Chancery procedure, we may mention that the Divorce Commissioners, as well as the Commissioners appointed to consider the question of testamentary jurisdiction, have both recommended, that in the new divorce court, which, perhaps, is to be constituted, and in the new probate court, which is not to be constituted, the Chancery mode of procedure should be generally followed. The former say, "that in general the process, practice and pleading of the Court of Chancery, as recently improved, with such additions as may be beneficially derived from the ecclesiastical system." The recommendations of the latter need no observation, now that they have been ignored, and the general plan of reform suggested by Sir R. Bethell, and sanctioned by the high authority of the Master of the Rolls and Sir James Graham, has been adopted by the Lord Chancellor. This view of the practical effects of the system introduced by Lord St. Leonards into Chancery has been acted upon by the Lord Chancellor in the measure which he introduced some short time ago for the transfer to the Court of Chancery of the testamentary jurisdiction at present exercised by the Ecclesiastical Courts. In fact, it was scarcely possible for his Lordship to have adopted any other course; for, as we have already observed, the Chancery Commissioners recommended that the system of procedure in the new court of probate which they proposed to establish, in all essential particulars, should be the amended procedure of the Court of Chancery. Although the interests of Doctors' Commons were very fairly represented on the commission, it certainly would have been something more than a mistake if the Lord Chancellor had sanctioned the constitution of a new and separate tribunal merely for the purpose of continuing the monopoly of the testamentary business of the country in the hands of the practitioners of Doctors' Commons. The Queen's Advocate dissented from the report in toto; Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C., Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., and Sir J. Dodson were in favour of adding the testamentary business to the Court of Chancery, to be administered on a separate and distinct system, as the appellate bankruptcy jurisdiction is now administered; and the Master of the Rolls, Sir James Graham, and the Solicitor-General were of opinion that the most expedient course would be to carry this business to that court which already possessed the largest share of testamentary jurisdiction—namely, the Court of Chancery. The majority of the commissioners recommended that appeals from the proposed new court should be taken in the first instance to the Court of Appeal in Chancery, thereby shewing that to some extent they were willing that this description of business should go to the Court of Chancery. The Chancellor, exercising, as we hold, a very wise discretion, adopted the views of the minority; for if he had not done so, the case would have stood practically thus—the general procedure was to be that of the Court of Chancery, the appeal was to be to the Lords Justices, and yet a new court was to be constituted! The suitors and the public would naturally inquire, for what purpose? The only answer which could be given would be this—for the benefit of one particular class of practitioners, whose rights are still to be so tenderly regarded by the Legislature, that for a limited period they are to have a monopoly of all the common-form business. The Parliament and people of this country have always regarded with jealousy and suspicion proposals for the establishment of new courts; and much as they may rejoice that the Court of Chancery has, in the fulness of time, undergone a thorough and efficient reformation, we believe no law reformer would have the moral courage deliberately to propose that a new court should be established as a second Court of Chancery in everything but the name. The measure of the Chancellor follows in every particular the scheme of reform which was propounded to Parliament by the Solicitor-General in April last. It sweeps away all the multitudinous, inconvenient, and expensive local jurisdictions, substituting district offices, in which wills of personalty up to 1800*l.* may be proved in common form. All contentious jurisdiction is for the future to be exercised by the Court of Chancery, and it is not anticipated that the amount of business to be transacted will throw much additional labour on the judges. The noble and learned Lord stated that it would occupy about sixty days in the year, which, divided between the four Chancery judges of the first instance, would be fifteen days for each. But if the facility which for the future will be afforded to suitors, in having all questions relating to wills decided expeditiously and economically by the same Court, should occasion a sensible increase in this description of business, the only course which then would be necessary would be to appoint an additional Vice-Chancellor, the expense of which neither Parliament nor the country could with any propriety begrudge. We repeat, that the principle of the measure is sound, inasmuch as it concentrates in one tribunal that jurisdiction which was arbitrarily and inconveniently divided amongst several tribunals, all having separate courts of appeal. If the Court of Chancery were empowered to summon juries to decide questions of fact relating to wills, or if the parties were permitted by consent to take the opinion of a judge on such questions, with the limitations suggested by the Common-law Commissioners, there would then be no necessity to invoke the aid of any other Court whatever. It is proposed that the probate should be valid for the whole of England. It is not necessary to dwell upon the obvious advantages which must arise from the abolition of the doctrine of bona notabilia; but the noble and learned Lord, to render his measure complete, should make provision by which one probate should be valid and effectual for the whole of the United Kingdom. We believe that there are no differences even in the Scottish system, which is the most dissimilar to our own, which would prevent this arrangement from being easily made. An impression prevails that divorce cases will be taken to the common-law courts, instead of the mixed tribunal which the commissioners recommend. This, perhaps, would be the most judicious course, for the constitution of a new court, without the most overwhelming grounds of necessity, is a measure which experience shews Parliament will not readily sanction. We trust, that whatever course may be adopted in reference to this extremely difficult and delicate subject, husband and wife, as a matter of justice, will be put on an equality with respect to both kinds of divorces. The commissioners say that "divorces à mensa et thoro are little more than separations—they only last until the parties think fit to be reconciled—and they are granted at the suit of the husband or wife, where the gross misconduct of either of them, such as cruelty, adultery, or the like, has rendered it impracticable for them to live together." They further say, that "divorces à vinculo should be allowed for adultery, and for adultery only; that divorces à vinculo should be granted on the suit of the husband, but that the wife should only have a right to apply for divorce à vinculo in cases of aggravated enormity, such as incest and bigamy." We confess that we can see no sufficient sanction for this distinction, on either moral or religious grounds, and we trust that it will be reconsidered before any measure on the subject is introduced into Parliament.

WESTMINSTER IMPROVEMENT BONDS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—It is extremely important that the statements made in a leading article of THE JURIST should be correct, not only as to the law, but as to the facts from which its inferences are drawn. It is more especially so when the subject of the article is the value and effect of securities current in the market, such as Westminster Improvement Bonds. I lose, therefore, no time in calling your attention to an omission in your article of last week on that subject, namely, that its writer did not refer to, and was doubtless not supplied with, a copy of the Westminster Improvement Act of last session, (16 & 17 Vict. c. clxxvi, local and personal), being "An Act to amend and enlarge the Powers and Provisions of the Westminster Improvement Acts, 1845, 1847, and 1850."

On a very recent occasion the four acts were laid before me, to ascertain the effect and operation of the bonds, which seem to me, as far as they are affected by the first three acts, correctly set out in your article. The commissioners are incorporated, with powers to make certain improvements, and are required to give security for the completion of a portion of such improvements, namely, in the amount of 10,000*l.* for the completion of Victoria-street, and 5000*l.* for the completion of a secondary street. They are authorised to enter into this security themselves, and the profits of the undertaking are to be paid to the parties giving such security, who are thus, in consideration of this limited liability, placed in the position of the shareholders of an incorporated company, of which the entire capital has been paid up. As such a corporation, the commissioners are empowered to borrow any sum of money which they shall judge necessary for the undertaking, (Horton v. The Westminster Improvement Commissioners, 7 Exch. 780)—that is, the entire working capital—the lenders of which are therefore the parties at whose risk their operations are carried on. There were, however, certain public grants or charges in aid of the undertaking, namely, 50,000*l.*, which the Commissioners of Public Works (Woods and Forests) were authorised to apply in its aid after the opening of Victoria-street, and three sums of 30,000*l.*, 20,000*l.*, and 3000*l.*, which are charged upon the probable increased value of the poor and highway rates, to be derived from the houses to be erected on the land of the commissioners—the two first after the ascertainment of a certain expenditure, the last with the consent of the vestries of the parishes of St. Margaret and St. John, Westminster; any interim deficiency, however, in the rates is charged on the undertaking in favour of the parishes.

The act of 1853, after noticing that Victoria-street had been completed, and the security for 10,000*l.* vacated, directs that the security for 5000*l.* shall be given, and enlarges the powers of the commissioners. It reenacts their borrowing powers, authorises them to lend money, and to erect and purchase houses themselves, (ss. 64 et seq.); it shows that the Commissioners of Public Works have advanced 30,000*l.* on the security of a mortgage and bond, and that another sum of 30,000*l.* is specifically charged on certain portions of the land in favour of a private mortgage; and in sects. 75, 76, and 78, discloses circumstances which may materially affect the bondholders—namely, that on the 26th May, 1852, the commissioners executed a mortgage and deed of settlement for securing the performance of bonds granted pursuant thereto, and which deeds the statute confirms. It thus provides that previous bondholders may exchange their bonds, so as to become entitled to the benefit of the mortgage, and saves any right of priority which they might otherwise have possessed. That right of priority would, I imagine, be any right obtained by a previous mortgage, or by registering judgment in an action on a bond. The proviso as to the liability of the corporate property alone does not appear to me to operate as a charge, but is simply expressio eorum que tacite insunt. (The Sunderland Marine Insurance Company v. Kearney, 15 Jur. 1006). It is, of course, impossible to speak with certainty as to this deed without inspecting it, but it seems probable that its object was to vest the property in trustees for the benefit of all the bond creditors rateably, and that of the two mortgages. The general act, 10 Vict. c. 16, which bears the same relation to commissioners for carrying on public works that the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act does to public joint-stock companies, and contains a similar provision for charging mortgages pro rata, without priority, does not seem to be incorporated with any of the Westminster Improvement Acts; hence the necessity for this trust deed. The probable result will be, that all bond creditors will share equally. Bond creditors under this deed can only enforce their securities according to its provisions, while previous bond creditors will probably be obliged to accept fresh bonds under it, unless the commissioners prefer to pay them off. Any right or remedy to which they might be entitled on obtaining judgment adversely to the proposed arrangement, could only operate a second charge on the real estate of the corporation after satisfaction of the bonds granted pursuant to the deed.

LONDON, MARCH 18, 1854.

THE proposed alterations in the course of common-law procedure, now before the House of Lords, together with those additions which are likely to be made in the Commons, will, if carried into effect, probably produce great changes, not only in the amount, but in the mode of transacting business in Chancery. By the additions likely to be made in the Commons, we mean the introduction of actions for specific performance into courts of common law—an addition to their jurisdiction which is almost certain to be made. Now, though, as being ourselves of the equity bar, we cannot personally look with any particular affection on changes the result of which may be to diminish considerably the business of equity, yet, as law reformers, we cannot see the slightest ground for contending that Courts of law ought not to have that jurisdiction, as well as that of admitting equitable defences, and granting injunctions, &c., in actions pending in their jurisdiction. The instance which the Lord Chancellor put, of an action for specific performance of a contract for marriage, was probably put by his Lordship by way of joking off a portion of the subject to which his Lordship entertained an aversion; because, of course, if Courts of law entertain actions for specific performance, they must, like Courts of equity, and every other Court, limit the exercise of their jurisdiction to cases in which the power placed at their disposal by human institutions, will enable them to compel performance of their orders; and as Courts of equity refuse attempting to compel performance of a simple contract to act, or to sing, or the like, merely because they will not stultify themselves by ordering that to be done which they have no power to force a man to do, so credit may be given to a Court of law that it will not attempt to order a horse to drink, or a man to marry, though it may flog the horse for not drinking, or make the man pay for not marrying. To be serious, the whole current of modern law reform as regards judicature is this—to import into the common law, or rather to add to it, equitable doctrines of conduct; and to import from the Court of Chancery into the Courts of common law, and from the latter into the former, the best and most efficacious of their respective modes of procedure; and when it can be shewn that in either Court either the doctrines by which it is bound, or the practice according to which it proceeds, are not such as to produce the one desired result—justice—the tendency, and the proper tendency, is to give to the deficient Court the powers that it did not possess. To take the question of equitable defences: it does seem not only very absurd, but very inconvenient, that if an action is brought on an instrument under seal, then, in order to set up, by way of defence, some transaction recognisable only on principles of equity, it should be necessary for the defendant to go out of the Court of common law into the Court of Chancery, and there obtain, by a separate and expensive course of proceeding, an order to stop the plaintiff at law from going on, on the ground of the equitable defence; or if an ejectment is brought at law, and the defendant sets up an outstanding term, on which, as a legal title he can rest, but on which for some reasons it would be very unjust that he should rest, it seems very inconveniently tedious and expensive that he should have to go into equity, as it is termed, to stay the setting up of the outstanding term. It will be a simpler, more expeditious, and more rational mode of proceeding in either of such cases, that the defendant in the one case, or the plaintiff in the other, should be able to set up the equitable defence in the action.

On the subject of specific performance, the giving such jurisdiction to Courts of law seems perfectly rational; but merely to do that, would be a one-sided reform as regards the public. The great object to be attained is, that the suitor may seek his remedy, so far as it is practicable, in any of her Majesty's courts, and that wherever he does choose to go, he may get complete justice. It is a hardship that in one court a plaintiff may get damages, and damages only, for the breach of a contract, and that in another he may have the contract enforced, but can have no more—that is, cannot have damages; and that is not merely a theoretical but a practical grievance, because it very often happens that a plaintiff mistakes his course—that is, goes to a Court of equity for specific performance when he is not entitled to it, though he might have been entitled to damages if he had gone originally to a Court of law. Now, what ought to be done for substantial reform of the law on such a point as this is, that whichever court a suitor happens to go into first, there he should be able to obtain complete justice. If he files a bill in Chancery for specific performance, and it turns out that he is not entitled to specific performance, but may be entitled to some damages, he ought not to be turned out of the Court of Chancery, with costs, to seek what remedy he can at law; but the Court of Chancery ought to be armed with power to say, "True it is, you are not entitled to the strict performance of the contract, but you have suffered damage, and are entitled to compensation, and we will give you damages." On the other hand, he ought not at law to be confined strictly to damages, but ought to be able to ask, in the alternative, either performance of the contract or damages.

Of course, in administering these equities, Courts of law ought to be bound to take notice of those higher principles of judicial morality, in applying the law to men's contracts, which are acted upon in Courts of equity, but have not been hitherto recognised by Courts of law. If they do not, to give them an equitable jurisdiction will only be putting into their hands a power of doing mischief instead of good.

REGULA GENERALIS.

ORDER OF COURT.—March 9.

I, the Right Hon. ROBERT MONSEY LORD CRANWORTH, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, do hereby order and direct in manner following—that is to say, that the General Order made by me bearing date the 31st January, 1863, be discharged, and in lieu thereof I do order, that the Registrar, in drawing up any decree or order whereby the Accountant-General shall be directed to pay or transfer any fund or part of any fund in respect of which any duty shall be payable to the revenue under the acts relating to legacy or succession duty, shall, unless such decree or order expressly provide for the payment of the duty, direct the Accountant-General to have regard to the circumstance that such duty is payable; and where, by any order, any carrying over to a separate account in respect of which any such duty may be chargeable shall be directed, the Registrar shall add the words "subject to legacy duty," or "subject to succession duty," as the case may be, to the title of the account; and in order the better to provide security against the payment or transfer by the Accountant-General of any fund chargeable with any such duty, without the duty being first paid, the Accountant-General, on receiving notice from the proper officer that the duty is payable, is to cause a memorandum to be made in his books in conformity with such notice. And the Accountant-General, before executing any decree or order directing the payment or transfer of any fund, or part of any fund, in respect of which any such duty shall be payable, shall require the production of the official receipt for the duty, or a certificate from the proper officer of the payment of the duty chargeable in respect of any such fund or any portion thereof respectively, by any such decree or order directed to be paid or transferred.

PUBLIC EXAMINATION.—TRINITY TERM, 1864.

THE Council of Legal Education have approved of the following rules for the public examination of the students.

The attention of the students is requested to the following rules of the Inns of Court:—

"As an inducement to students to propose themselves for examination, studentships shall be founded of fifty guineas per annum each, to continue for a period of three years, and one such studentship shall be conferred on the most distinguished student at each public examination; and further, the examiners shall select and certify the names of three other students who shall have passed the next best examinations, and the Inns of Court to which such students belong may, if desired, dispense with any terms, not exceeding two, that may remain to be kept by such students previously to their being called to the Bar. Provided that the examiners shall not be obliged to confer or grant any studentship or certificate unless they shall be of opinion that the examination of the students they select has been such as entitles them thereto."

"At every call to the Bar those students who have passed a public examination, and either obtained a studentship or a certificate of honour, shall take rank in seniority over all other students who shall be called on the same day."

"No student shall be eligible to be called to the Bar who shall not either have attended during one whole year the lectures of two of the Readers, or have satisfactorily passed a public examination."

RULES FOR THE PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF CANDIDATES FOR HONOURS, OR CERTIFICATES ENTITLING STUDENTS TO BE CALLED TO THE BAR.

An examination will be held in next Trinity Term, to which a student of any of the Inns of Court, who is desirous of becoming a candidate for a studentship or honours, or of obtaining a certificate of fitness for being called to the Bar, will be admissible.

Each student proposing to submit himself for examination will be required to enter his name at the treasurer's office of the Inn of Court to which he belongs on or before Monday, the 15th day of May next; and he will further be required to state in writing whether his object in offering himself for examination is to compete for a studentship or other honourable distinction, or whether he is merely desirous of obtaining a certificate preliminary to a call to the Bar.

The examination will commence on Monday, the 22nd day of May next, and will be continued on the Tuesday and Wednesday following.

It will take place in the Benchers' Reading-room of Lincoln's-inn; and the doors will be closed ten minutes after the time appointed for the commencement of the examination.

The examination by printed questions will be conducted in the following order:—

Monday morning, the 22nd May, at half-past nine, on Constitutional Law and Legal History; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on Equity.

Tuesday morning, the 23rd May, at half-past nine, on Common Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on the Law of Real Property, &c.

Wednesday morning, the 24th May, at half-past nine, on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, a paper will be given to the students including questions bearing upon all the foregoing subjects of examination.

The oral examination will be conducted in the same order, during the same hours, and on the same subjects, as those already marked out for the examination by printed questions, except that on Wednesday afternoon there will be no oral examination.

The oral examination of each student will be conducted apart from the other students; and the character of that examination will vary according as the student is a candidate for honours or a studentship, or desires simply to obtain a certificate.

The oral examination and printed questions will be founded on the books below mentioned, regard being had, however, to the particular object with a view to which the student presents himself for examination.

In determining the question, whether a student has passed the examination in such a manner as to entitle him to be called to the Bar, the examiners will principally have regard to the general knowledge of law and jurisprudence which he has displayed.

A student may present himself at any number of examinations, until he shall have obtained a certificate.

Any student who shall obtain a certificate may present himself a second time for examination as a candidate for the studentship, but only at one of the three examinations immediately succeeding that at which he shall have obtained such certificate; provided, that if any student so presenting himself shall not succeed in obtaining the studentship, his name shall not appear in the list.

Students who have kept more than eleven terms shall not be admitted to an examination for the studentship.

The READER ON CONSTITUTIONAL LAW and LEGAL HISTORY will expect all students to answer any general questions relating to the History of England, and to know the outlines of Constitutional Law.

The candidates for distinction will be expected to know the progress of our institutions, and the changes of our Constitution. THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH (literal and entire from the Short-hand Writer's Notes) upon the Application of Mr. W. H. BARBER for his ATTORNEY'S CERTIFICATE. With new Evidence and Remarks.

"We are unacquainted with Mr. Barber's plans, but it is impossible to deny that he has made out a case for a rehearing on the question of his certificate."—Law Magazine, Feb. 1854.

"A mass of new and curious evidence. Not one man in a thousand would have suspected a fraud under such accumulated proofs of apparent genuineness. Mr. Barber has now made his vindication complete, even in the minds of those who might have entertained a lingering doubt whether he was not cognisant, to some extent, of the nature of the transactions."—Law Times.

LONDON, MARCH 25, 1854.

WE return this week, on the eve of the closing of the Chancery sittings previously to Easter Term, to the subject of the Courts of equity sitting at Westminster during the two terms that Parliament is sitting, for the purpose of again bringing to the notice of the Profession, and of the heads of the Profession, the great and now almost incalculable inconvenience of the sittings being held at Westminster. It was an inconvenience years ago, even in the palmy days of heavy and slow Chancery business, when Master's office business was done in the Master's office, and when the Court never, or very rarely, sat beyond three. But since the new Procedure Act has come into full operation, the inconvenience has grown to be an absolute nuisance to the greater part of the inner Bar, to the whole of the working outer Bar, and to nearly the whole body of solicitors. How it is that the judges themselves bear it we do not understand, except on the assumption that judicial habits induce a sort of dignified phlegmatism, which indisposes those eminent persons to complain of anything. That they must personally feel the inconvenience we are satisfied. We have ourselves frequently, in walking up from Westminster at the rising of the Courts, been passed by a learned Vice-Chancellor at a speed which indicated plainly that he was "due" in chambers at four, with but small chance of reaching Lincoln's Inn in time, except by great personal exertion.

Let us see, however, how the system really works. The Courts at Westminster sit at ten; the offices which are in and about Lincoln's Inn open at ten; consequently nothing that is officially wanted at the Court, can be procured so as to be there before about eleven, unless procured the night before. The Courts sit till about half-past three, often till four; some till half-past three, some till four and past. There is no settled hour for the judges sitting in chambers: it may happen that a Vice-Chancellor rises at three, and goes to chambers by half-past; and the same day the Master of the Rolls may sit till half-past four; so that a solicitor attending the last cause at the Rolls, and having a case in chambers before the Vice-Chancellor at four, can by no possibility attend to both. It may be said, at this point happen if the Courts sat at Lincoln's Inn. True, it might happen; but would be not nearly so likely to happen.

Then as regards counsel: the Courts sitting later than they used, and inevitably later, because there is more to be got through in court, the consultations are necessarily also later. On an average, leading counsel require from an hour and a half to two hours for their afternoon's consultations. When the Courts sit at Lincoln's Inn, and the counsel go direct to their chambers in a few minutes, it is possible for the consultations to be got through by six o'clock. But add the half hour which, between unrobing, getting to chambers, and getting breath, is wasted, and it is no longer possible. It may be said, but all this is a question of half an hour. But we say in answer, that as it is the last straw that breaks the camel's back, so it is the last half hour that deadens the counsel's brain and paralyses his stomach; and half an hour at the most valuable part of the day is no mean portion of time.

Then as to the draftsmen: it is true that drawing is not what it was in quantity, but it is much more troublesome, and requires much more the eye and hand of the master. No man, it is admitted on all hands, can do his drawing business at Westminster. In court it is of course out of the question—first, because there are no tables; secondly, because there are no books; thirdly, because there is no quiet. We have seen men making desperate attempts to settle a draft in the little box at the corner of Sir W. P. Wood's Court, called a room for counsel, but the attempt has generally been given up after a few struggles. Practically, and as a fact, we fear no denial in asserting, that he who, having court business at Westminster, can, while waiting for it, draw, or even settle, ten pages of any pleading in a day, is a miracle of draftsman power; so that, unless a man is engaged all day long in causes, the time he wastes unwillingly is perfectly fruitful.

Now, then, all this being undeniable, cui bono? Who really derives any benefit from it? Certainly not half-a-dozen of the Chancery Bar. Perhaps the Attorney or Solicitor General of the day, and two or three of the most eminent leaders usually pitted against that functionary, may find a convenience in oscillating between the Court of Chancery and the House of Lords; but even to them the inconvenience of not having that convenience, would be a trifle as compared with the inconvenience which the rest of the Profession suffer from the equity sittings being held nearly two miles from all the offices and all the counsel's chambers. And surely, even if the inconvenience, to a few great leaders, of the sittings being at Lincoln's Inn were much greater than it would be, it is not at this day that the claims of a whole Profession ought to be sacrificed to those of a few men, however eminent, however respected, however popular among their brethren and their clients. Then comes the great argument in favour of Westminster—the prestige. Shall we quit the old Hall, the scene of so many forensic glories—where the law of England grew and matured itself—where so long a line of grave and learned magistrates has adorned the judgment-seat? Shall we sever altogether the connexion between the two Bars, and interfere with that friendly intercommunication which leads to a commingling of learning, and to the strength and unanimity of the English Bar, &c. &c.? Now, prestige is not a thing to be despised when it rests on something substantial. When there really was a sort of exclusive possession by Westminster of legal learning—that is, when no judge but the Chancellor and the Master of the Rolls ever sat at Lincoln's Inn, and the Term sittings were as long as the Vacation sittings—it was not unsubstantial to attribute a legal sanctity to Westminster Hall. So, when the two Bars were so far distinct that the Chancery Bar was, in fact, scarcely a Bar, and would have been forgotten if it did not commingle with the Common-law Bar, and had scarcely any other means of doing so except through Westminster Hall sittings, there was substance in clinging to Westminster; and the prestige was reverend, because real. But now the face of affairs has totally changed. Westminster Hall is rapidly being merged in Lincoln's Inn; amalgamation, or partial amalgamation, of the two Bars is almost at our doors; and every ground of substance on which the old prestige was supported has crumbled away, or is doomed in a very few years to crumble away. Let us not, then, sacrifice substance to a vain imagination, but all unite in respectfully urging on the authorities the claims of the public and the Profession, to have the equity sittings permanently there, where the public business can be most conveniently and expeditiously transacted.

COUNTY COURTS COMMISSION.

THE following answer to the 57th query of the County Court Commissioners has been sent to them by a County Court Judge:—

GENERAL QUESTION.

57. Can you suggest any amendment, addition, or improvement in the statutes, rules, or forms?

ANSWER.

I. Statutes.

Repeal stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, ss. 128, 129, (except as relates to actions against officers), and stat. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 54, s. 4, (so far as relates to concurrent jurisdiction), and give the county court judge power, in all cases, to allow travelling expenses to a plaintiff or defendant who resides in another jurisdiction.

Enact that a defendant sued in the superior courts for a debt or damages not exceeding 50*l.* may, within ten days after service of the writ, enter an appearance in the clerk's office of the county court in the district in which he resides, by leaving his name with the clerk for registration, and paying a small fee. Clerk to give notice to the plaintiff. Mode of entering appearance to be indorsed on the writ*.

Repeal part of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 58, commencing at the words "or in which the title," and ending with the word "disputed;" and alter accordingly stat. 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 1. Give dissatisfied party a right of appeal, or (both parties consenting) a case, as after mentioned. (Vide infra).

Give county court power to entertain actions of

* The object of this is not to deprive a plaintiff of the right of pursuing his remedy in the superior courts, where he is justly entitled to do so, but to prevent the abuse of the Common-law Procedure Act, (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), in a manner which I shall be ready to explain if called upon, but which is probably already well known to the commissioners.

jectment as to real property within the jurisdiction, where the property does not exceed 100*l.* in value, and the defendant has, or claims, no other real property; with appeal or case.

Give county court the power of committal for non-payment of costs.

Make county court a court of probate, in respect of personal estates not exceeding 200*l.* in value, of persons dying within the district. Probate duty, 2*l.* 10*s.* per cent., receivable by clerk. Estate to be administered in county court as in a court of equity.

Give county court power, on the death of a person seized in fee of real estate not exceeding 200*l.* in value, lying within the jurisdiction, (the deceased dying seized of no other real estate), to decree a sale of the estate and payment of his debts, according to the practice of a court of equity. Provide for the case where the estate lies in more than one district.

Give county court power to decree specific performance of contracts where subject-matter does not exceed 200*l.* in value.

Give county court power to order delivery up of deeds, papers, and documents, as against persons claiming a lien upon them in respect of demands not exceeding 50*l.* Cases over 20*l.* in amount to be subject to appeal.

Give county court general power of annexing equitable conditions to orders made in actions.

Extend process in actions to Scotland, where contract took place in England.

II. Rules.

Repeal rule 3, (which operates most vexatiously and uselessly in country circuits*); rules 18, 21, and the latter part of 22, (which involve unnecessary trouble and expense); rule 38, (the oath required by which is unnecessary and improper); and rule 78.

Extend the provisions of rules 52 and 56 to the sheriff's court in London.

Add to rule 84 the words, "provided always, that the judge may, in his discretion, order the costs of every adjournment to be costs in the cause."

General Suggestions.

Do not alter the law as to service of process.

Do not, in any case, enable a plaintiff to establish his case merely on his own oath or affidavit of debt.

Except in cases of extended jurisdiction, do not extend the power of appeal; but in all actions, whether appealable or not, give county court judge authority, at his discretion, to lay a printed case, consented to by both parties, before judge in Chancery or judge of superior courts of law, such judge to be required to give his opinion thereon.

Do not alter the present mode of paying attorneys practising in county courts. If necessary, provide for a specific addition to their present fees, whether at the discretion of the judge or not; but lay no foundation for bills of costs.

Do not interfere with the county court judge's freedom of action, either as regards the days of holding courts, the hours of sitting, or any other matter of that nature. The more the judge has to do, the less ought he to be impeded. If he misbehaves, let him be called to account, but do not tie his hands.

Do not compel a strict uniformity of practice in matters of minor importance.

Do not frame a new code of rules, but add any new rules that may be required, by way of supplement, to the old ones.

* The sitting at an inferior town in a country circuit frequently occupies no more than two hours, one hour, or even less; yet, by rule 3, a judge must remain until another day before he can hold another court, involving probably no greater amount of business.

LONDON, APRIL 1, 1854.

Among the interesting questions which are daily arising in our courts of law we may certainly rank those which relate to the measure of damages awarded to the successful party in an action. These questions do not rest, nor therefore can they be argued, upon arbitrary or technical grounds, but only upon considerations of natural justice between man and man. The problem to be solved is the exact apportionment of redress for a given injury—a problem that has engaged the attention of moral philosophers, as well as of legislators and judges. Nice discrimination, and a steady hand to hold the balance, are often required for the purpose of accurately determining the amount of compensation. Varying, and dependent on the policy, climate, or condition of a people, has been the principle of assessment: sometimes the lex talionis has prevailed, “an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth;” at other times a were-gild, or money commutation, even for the life of a man. In a more practical point of view, it is a matter of importance for those who have suffered wrong to know with what measure compensation will be meted out to them—whether justice will open her hand liberally, or like a niggard. There are some verdicts, like the Highlander's horse, “hard to catch, and not worth the catching;” and it is well to avoid the perilous pursuit, which, if successful, can only lead to such a result.

An important judgment upon this branch of our law has lately been delivered in the Court of Exchequer*, and a principle is there laid down which is capable of extensive application, and of settling many questions which hitherto have been left in uncertainty. The facts were briefly these:—The plaintiffs were the owners of a large flour-mill at Gloucester, which was worked by a steam-engine, the shaft of which having been broken, they, on the 14th May, 1852, delivered it to the defendants (more generally known by the name of Pickford & Co.) to take to Greenwich, where it was to serve as a model for the making of a new shaft. A delay of six days beyond the time that was reasonably required for the carriage of the broken shaft took place, and in consequence a corresponding delay took place in the completion and transmission of the new shaft. It appeared that the shaft was an essential part of the machinery, and that, until the new shaft was supplied, all the hands about the mill were unemployed, and all the profits derived from the working of the mill were lost. The learned judge who presided told the jury that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover for the damage which they had sustained by reason of the stoppage of the mill for six days, and the jury gave 25*l.* damages, in addition to 25*l.* paid into court. This ruling was held to be wrong, and a new trial was granted. The Court, in delivering their considered judgment, said that the true principle upon which damages should be assessed for a breach of contract is, that the damages should be such as either result naturally from the breach, or may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of the parties at the time of entering into the contract. "If there were special circumstances, and they were communicated to the party who has broken the contract, then such special circumstances, being known, were in the contemplation of the parties, and may be taken into consideration in assessing the damages. . . . Suppose there had been another shaft at the mill, the delay would have had no effect on the profits; or if other machinery equally essential to its being worked had been out of order, the same result would have happened. . . . It is obvious, that in the generality of cases of a miller sending a broken shaft these consequences would not follow. Here the special circumstances were not communicated, and were entirely unknown to the defendants. We think," continued the Court, "that the judge ought to have told the jury that they ought not to take the loss of profits into consideration." In the course of the argument, Parke, B., referred, with approbation, to the rule of the French law, Code Civil, liv. 3, tit. 3, s. 1150—"Le débiteur n'est tenu que des dommages et intérêts, qui ont été prévu ou qu'on a pu prévoir lors du contrat, lorsque ce n'est point par son dol que l'obligation n'est point exécutée." The same doctrine prevails in the American law. Thus it is laid down in 2 Kent's Com. 480, note, (4th ed.)—"Damages for breaches of contract are only those which are incidental to and directly caused by the breach, and may reasonably be supposed to have entered into the contemplation of the parties, and not speculative profits, or accidental or consequential losses."

* Hadley and Others v. Baxendale and Others, (Exch., Feb. 23, 1854). It will shortly appear in The Jurist, and will be published in the next part of the Exchequer Reports.

It was also said by the Court that actions for not making out a good title to land contracted to be sold, and actions on bills of exchange and for non-payment of a specific sum of money, did not afford an exception to the above rule, but rather fell within the second branch of it, as each party may be said to have contemplated, upon entering into the contract, that in case the contract should be broken, the damages should be in accordance with the conventional rule, which is well established, viz. in the first case, that the damages should be limited to the expense of investigating the title, and should not include the loss of the bargain; and in the second and third, only the precise sums agreed to be paid should be recovered.

The rule, as above laid down, doubtless tends to limit the liability of carriers and other contracting parties or bailees, in the absence of express notice, and shews the necessity of giving such notice, if the party who alone possesses the knowledge wishes to guard himself against loss. In numerous cases, as in the one under review, the loss of profit, the payment of wages to unemployed workmen, the liability on subsidiary contracts not performed because of the principal contract being broken, would form the only damage; and therefore, if these special circumstances be not communicated to the other party, the one who suffers the actual injury has no redress. The shaft may have been essential to the machinery, the machinery to the working of the mill, the working of the mill to the employment of the men, to the realisation of profits, and to the performance of other contracts; yet, for want of disclosing these facts, the shaft becomes, in the eye of the law, so many hundredweight of old iron, the delivery whereof may be delayed without any injury or loss naturally resulting from it.

The adoption of such a principle cannot be said to be unreasonable. Here are two contracting parties—one possessing full knowledge, the other totally ignorant, of the special circumstances attending the contract, or, in other words, of the peculiar consequences that will accrue from a breach. If the former does not place the latter on an equal footing with himself in this respect, but induces him to undertake an extraordinary charge at the ordinary rates of risk, he has no right to complain if he is debarred from recovering the amount of his loss. He had the opportunity of stimulating the other party to the use of extra caution, and of making him responsible for all the injury accruing from neglect on his part. The other had a right to be forewarned, in order to be forearmed.

The principle thus clearly laid down will affect and practically overrule several previous decisions, in which the loss of profits, and damages which have been paid for non-performance of subsidiary contracts, have been allowed as damages for breach of the principal contract, although no notice has been brought home to the defaulting party; (see, for instance, Walters v. Thomas, 8 Exch. 401); but it will not probably touch the class of cases where the contract may be said, from its very character, to involve notice of the natural consequences to be apprehended from a breach. Thus, in an action for a breach of warranty of a chain cable, the plaintiff was held entitled to recover the value of the anchor to which the cable was attached, on proving, that a link of the cable being broken, the crew slipped the cable in order to avoid danger, and that the anchor and cable were thereby lost. (Borradaile v. Brunton, 8 Taunt. 535). So, the damages will probably still be affected by matter subsequent to the making of the contract; as if a man buy a horse with a warranty, and, relying thereon, resell him with a warranty, and being sued on the warranty by his vendee, he offers the defence to his vendor, who gives no directions as to the action, the first vendee, if he defend that action, is entitled to recover the costs thereof from his vendor as part of the damages occasioned by his breach of the warranty; (Lewis v. Peake, 7 Taunt. 163); unless he might have known, by a reasonable examination of the horse before he defended the action, that the animal was unsound at the time he resold it. (Per Cur., Wright v. Chamberlain, 7 Scott, 598, 602). It would seem that the special damage should henceforth be stated in the declaration, so as to bring it within the rule laid down in the principal case.

It must not be overlooked, that although this rule applies generally to all cases of breach of contract, yet it is not applicable where fraud has been committed, ("par son dol que l'obligation n'est point exécutée"), nor where the defendant is a mere wrongdoer, as in actions of tort.

The Judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench upon the Application of Mr. W. H. Barber for his Attorney's Certificate; with new Evidence and Remarks.

[Crockford, 1854.]

There may be some among our readers who tire of the constantly reiterated appeal for justice, who cast aside the book that contains the oft-told tale of wrongs endured and rights denied, and who class Mr. Barber, the Baron de Bode, and the Rajah of Sattara among the individuals destined to vex the human race with their complaints. We are not among the number who thus regard these appellants to the high court of public opinion.

Admitting that it is tedious to dwell for a long period upon any one subject; that it is difficult to preserve a sustained interest through more than five acts, or eight volumes of the same work; and not forgetting that even the contemplation of consistent virtue becomes wearisome, so that men were tired of hearing Aristides called "The Just;" yet, while the wrong remains, we would not hush the voice of that man who cries aloud to his fellow-men for redress; we would not refuse to listen to him, or to call the attention of others to his sorrowful narrative. Let us remember that by adopting a different course we promise impunity to those who persevere in injustice, for they will feel, that by deferring the remedy, the public will cease to care for its application. But while the injured man is supported by the sympathy of his fellow-citizens, he has cause to utter the fulness of his heart, and success often crowns his long-continued efforts. The importunate widow moved the judge, who feared not God nor regarded man, until he said, "Because this widow troubleth me I will avenge her, lest by her continual coming she weary me."

These introductory remarks will justify us, we hope, in calling the attention of our readers to the small volume just issued from the press, which throws additional light upon a case which is undoubtedly one of the most remarkable in professional history.

Since the delivery of the judgment in the Court of Queen's Bench, Mr. Barber, it appears, has devoted himself to obtaining information by which to elucidate the points relied upon by the Court, and his labours have not been in vain.

The explanation which he is now enabled to afford, presented in the form of a sectional analysis of the judgment, can scarcely fail to satisfy impartial minds. The particulars of the concoction by Fletcher and his confederates of these remarkable frauds, as well those introduced to Messrs. Barber & Bircham's office as those previously effected through the instrumentality of other solicitors, have been traced, and it is now shown that in numerous instances Fletcher had succeeded in imposing, not only upon his own solicitors, but also upon those retained by the Government to protect this description of property; and in one case, even though their suspicions had at first been actually aroused, Fletcher ultimately palmed off his fraud upon them, realising for himself and accomplice, who personated a "Miss Mary Hunt," upwards of 4000*l*. No imputation has ever been cast upon either of the professional gentlemen employed in that transaction.

The details which the volume presents are both interesting and curious. Amongst the recently-discovered evidence is a narrative of the Slack fraud, written by Fletcher's principal accomplice, Sanders, which shews that the most elaborate contrivances were resorted to in order to guard against suspicion from Mr. Barber. In reference to the forgery of the will, Sanders says, "In consequence of that letter," (a letter he had addressed to Mr. Barber in the name of J. James),

"Fletcher would not allow me to write the new fictitious will, fearing that Barber would discover a similarity in the writing." This revelation also throws light upon "the death at Bath," and other points dwelt upon by the Court. Fletcher's secret machinery is made known, and the extraordinary precautions adopted by him, especially in interweaving fraudulent with bona fide cases, not distinguishable by any facts within Mr. Barber's knowledge, were well calculated to disarm suspicion. Fletcher not only imposed upon the solicitors, proctors, and brokers whom he from time to time employed, but also upon those whose express duty it was to sift and scrutinise fraud in these matters, and whose minds, therefore, would constantly be in an attitude of vigilance.

Upon the argument in the Queen's Bench, and throughout the discussion of the case, Mr. Barber has sustained much prejudice from the idea that it was the duty of the Bank to keep the amount of unclaimed stock and dividends a secret, and that he must therefore necessarily have known that Fletcher obtained the information on which he proceeded surreptitiously. This is, however, a misconception, for by the 56 Geo. 3, c. 60, s. 1, it is enacted, that (in addition to the other particulars) "the amount transferred shall be entered upon a list to be kept at the Bank for that purpose, which list shall be open for inspection at the usual hours of transfer at the Bank." Mr. Barber, therefore, might reasonably believe that Fletcher obtained his information legitimately, through his stockbroker, as he had represented.

The explanations are fortified by clear evidence, and we cannot but concur in the hope expressed, we believe unanimously, by our contemporaries, that Mr. Barber may speedily be restored to those professional rights from the enjoyment of which his singular misfortunes have so long debarred him.

A Treatise on the Law and Practice relating to Letters-patent for Inventions. By JOHN PAXTON NORMAN, Esq., M.A. Post 8vo., pp. 276. [Butterworths.]

THIS is a very compact and useful manual. The most difficult part of the text-writer's task is the statement of the principle by which the question of the amount of novelty in an invention, necessary to sustain a patent for it, is answered. Many of the cases are, no doubt, unsatisfactory, and some of those which are still allowed to be cited would probably be differently decided at the present day. But the subject is very capable of a scientific exposition, though it has not yet received it from the pen of any writer, either here or in the United States. It must be confessed that our treatises on patent law furnish an exception to the general excellence of our legal text-books. Mr. Norman has not in this particular improved upon his predecessors; but he has not fallen behind them; and as he has very diligently collected, clearly arranged, and concisely stated the substance of all the authorities, he has furnished to the reader the means of readily ascertaining for himself the state of the law, and of correcting or supplying the deficiencies of the author's general deductions. For example, at p. 14, Mr. Norman says, "When a material is once known, it may be applied in any manner"—implying that the application of a known material to any known purpose is not a good subject for a patent. This, of course, is too wide, but it is corrected by the statement of instances which follows:—"Therefore tubes coated with brass being known, and tubes welded by a mandrel and die being known, a patent for their use as the tubular flues of a boiler is not good. (Reg. v. Bulter, 3 Car. & K. 215). The application of bone hafts and latten plates for the handles of knives has been held not to be a good subject-matter of a patent. (Mattley's Patent, Noy, 178).

'But when the application involves a new discovery of a property in the thing applied, or a new result is obtained, a patent may be good. Thus, though the adoption of caoutchouc as a fillet for cards was a very simple matter, yet, as it was a substance whose properties and fitness for that purpose had never been known before, the adaptation was held to be a good subject-matter of a patent.' If Mr. Norman had assumed to criticise as well as state the authorities, he might have suggested that the dictum in Reg. v. Butler (for the specification was defective on other grounds) and the decision in Mattley's case were erroneous; and that the application of any substance to a purpose to which it has never been applied before, though the use of other substances in the same manner, for the same purpose, is known, may be protected by letters-patent, even though the result be in noways different from that already obtained by the use of other materials. The Statute of Monopolies speaks of "new manufactures," not improvements; and though, in applying the statute, the Courts have held that the new manufacture sought to be protected must be useful per se, they have not required that it should be more useful than any known manufacture of the same kind.

Mr. Norman has fully stated the practice and forms under the late act, and the regulations of the Commissioners of Patents. With reference to the "provisional specification," after giving a summary of the existing regulations, he says, (p. 54):—

"The provisional specification will be a check on the patentee. If the complete specification is not strictly in accordance with it, people will be entitled to say that something is specified which would have been opposed, but which could not be opposed because the provisional specification gave no notice of what was intended to be specified. That information, if given to the Attorney-General, might have induced him to withhold the patent." We apprehend that there is a better ground for holding that a discrepancy between the provisional and final specifications is fatal, namely, that if the provisional specification describes too much, it is a fraud on the Crown; and if it does not include all that the complete specification claims, the latter is bad, as claiming more than was granted by the letters-patent. Mr. Norman proceeds:—"If an inventor desires to abandon anything contained in his provisional specification, in order to guard against the objection that he represented himself to have invented more than he has actually specified, he should enter a disclaimer with the specification."

"If the first outline description would not be sufficient to embrace all the improvements in the invention, or in the mode of working it out, the proper course would seem to be to abandon the proceedings taken on the first provisional specification, and commence afresh with a new application, before the invention comprised in the first provisional specification is made public."

The first suggestion would be very judicious if it were certain that there is any power to disclaim part of a provisional specification after its allowance by the law officers; and the second would be right if the publication of the first abandoned provisional specification did not operate, like any other publication, to defeat the protection sought under the new proceedings for so much of the invention as had been so published. We need not enlarge on this subject, as it is fully treated in the communication which follows this notice.

ON THE PROVISIONAL SPECIFICATION OF INVENTIONS.

THE nature, office, and effect of the provisional specification of an invention under the Patent-law

Amendment Act, 1852, do not appear to be very generally understood in practice, if we may draw any inference from the inaccuracy with which the document is frequently drawn, the frequent discrepancy between the provisional and the final specification of a patented invention, and the confidence with which the proceedings upon a provisional specification are sometimes abandoned, for the purpose of making a fresh application for letters-patent upon an amended specification of what is substantially the same invention.

The 6th section of the act requires, that with every petition for the grant of letters-patent for an invention shall be left a statement in writing, called the provisional specification, "describing the nature of the invention."

Every application for letters-patent is to be referred to one of the law officers, (sect. 7), and to him also is to be referred the provisional specification; and if he is satisfied that the provisional specification describes the nature of the invention, he is to allow it, and give a certificate of his allowance, to be filed in the office of the commissioners; "and thereupon the invention therein referred to may, during the term of six months from the date of the application for letters-patent for the said invention, be used and published without prejudice to any letters-patent to be granted for the same." This is called provisional protection. In case the title of the invention, or the provisional specification, be too large, or insufficient, the law officer may allow or require the same to be amended. (Sect. 8).

In lieu of leaving a provisional specification, the applicant may file with his petition and declaration a complete specification under hand and seal, "particularly describing and ascertaining the nature of the said invention, and in what manner the same is to be performed;" and the day of the delivery of such petition, declaration, and complete specification is to be recorded at the office of the commissioners, and indorsed on them, and a certificate thereof given to him; "and thereupon, subject and without prejudice to the provisions hereinafter contained, the invention shall be protected under this act for the term of six months from the date of the application;" and the validity of the letters-patent is to be made conditional on the sufficiency of such previously filed complete specification. (Sect. 9).

Sect. 16 authorises the Crown, by warrant under the sign-manual, to direct any complete specification which may have been filed, and on which no letters-patent may have been granted, to be cancelled, "and thereupon the protection obtained by the filing of such complete specification shall cease."

We cite this enactment merely for the purpose of shewing more clearly than would otherwise appear the difference between provisional protection and the absolute protection gained by filing a complete specification in the first instance—a course which in many cases will be found to be the most prudent and the least expensive.

Sects. 15 and 18 authorise the preparing and sealing of letters-patent for "the said invention."

Sect. 20 provides that (subject to certain exceptions) no letters-patent shall issue, "or be of any force or effect," unless the same be granted during the continuance of the provisional protection, or the protection by reason of the deposit of a complete specification.

The letters-patent may be dated as of the day of the application for the same, (sect. 23); but if a complete specification of the invention was not deposited on the application, no proceeding at law or in equity shall be had on the letters-patent in respect of any infringement committed before the same were actually granted. (Sect. 24).

Sect. 39 enacts, that all the provisions of the acts of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 69, relating to disclaimer, and memoranda of alterations in letters-patent and specifications, except as hereinafter provided, shall apply to any letters-patent granted and to any specification filed under the act. This does not seem to extend to provisional specifications, which are not required to be filed. If that be so, no disclaimer or amendment can be made in respect of a provisional specification after its allowance by the law officer.

The form of the provisional specification given in the schedule to the act is as follows:—

"I, —, do hereby declare the nature of the said invention [title as in petition] to be as follows:— [Here insert the description.] Dated this — day of —, A. D. —,"

The 3rd section of the act authorises "the commissioners from time to time to make such rules and regulations (not inconsistent with the provisions of this act) respecting the business of their office, and all matters and things which, under the provisions herein contained, are to be under their control and direction, as may appear to them necessary and expedient for the purposes of this act." The tenth of the second set of rules issued by the commissioners (15th October, 1852) requires that the provisional specification must state distinctly and intelligibly the whole nature of the invention, so that the law officer may be apprised of the improvement, and of the means by which it is to be carried into effect. This rule is not very definite, but if it means more than describing the nature of the invention it is a nullity, for the substance of the provisional specification is not placed under the control and direction of the commissioners.

The most important questions with respect to the provisional specification are, first, whether anything can be claimed by the subsequent or final specification which is not fairly covered by the terms of the provisional specification; and, secondly, whether the complete specification may omit anything which is clearly claimed by the provisional specification.

First, generality or looseness in the terms of provisional specifications seems to be immaterial—as it is in the title of the patent, (see Cook v. Pearce, 8 Q. B. 1044)—if the specification is allowed by the law officer. But if the provisional specification assumes to enter into particulars, or to describe the mode of carrying the invention into effect, without containing sufficient general words to cover other particulars not specified, it seems that such other particulars cannot be afterwards specified and claimed without defeating the letters-patent. And as the provisional specification can only be amended by permission of the law officer "to whom the same is referred," no amendment can be made after the certificate of allowance is granted, when the law officer becomes functus officio.

The letters-patent are to issue for "the said invention"—i. e. the invention described in the provisional specification; and letters-patent not granted during the continuance of the provisional protection are to be of no force. It is therefore clear that the provisional specification (although it is not referred to in the letters-patent) must always be looked to, to ascertain what is the invention to which the patent relates; and as nothing could formerly be claimed which was not covered by the title of the patent, so now nothing can be claimed which is not covered by the provisional specification. The most accurate notion of the nature and effect of the provisional specification will be gained by regarding it as the title of the patent—required, indeed, to enter more into detail than was necessary under the old law, but otherwise having the same operation in defining and limiting the subject-matter of claim in the specification. It is to describe the nature of the invention—that was the office of the title of the patent—but it is to describe it to the satisfaction of the law officer; and if it is allowed by him, no objection can be taken to it on the ground of its being too large or vague.

The result is, that the provisional specification should be made as large and general as the law officer will permit it to be made, avoiding details and particulars as far as possible; or if it be found necessary or advisable to enter into particulars, the implied exclusion of other particulars should be prevented by the use of proper saving and general words.

Secondly, the terms of the provisional specification must not describe anything which the inventor is not able to include in his final specification. For though it is not necessary to discriminate in the provisional specification between the new and the old parts of the subject-matter, it must not state any result as attained or attainable by the inventor which the inventor cannot carry out and claim. The provisional specification, like the title, is a statement of the nature of the invention; and the Courts have held, with a rigour that is perhaps too indiscriminating, that a patent is bad if the specification fails to describe everything that is necessarily implied in the title—because the title is the statement to the Crown of the applicant's merits; and if the statement is excessive, the grant is bad, as founded on a deceitful representation. (Res v. Wheeler, 2 B. & Al. 345; Blissam v. Elsee, 6 B. & Cr. 169; Cook v. Pearce, 8 Q. B. 1044). Thus, in Felton v. Graves (3 Car. & P. 611) it was held, that a patent for "a machine for an expeditious and correct mode of giving a fine edge to knives, razors, scissors, and other cutting instruments," was void because no machine capable of sharpening scissors was described in the specification. So, in Turner v. Winter, (1 T. R. 602), a patent for producing a yellow colour for printing, for making whitelead, and for separating the mineral alkali from common salt, all in one process, was held bad because the white substance produced by the specified process was not whitelead. The principle of these decisions is obviously as applicable to excess in the provisional specification as to excess in the title. By claiming too much when he is applying for the patent the inventor deceives the Crown—by claiming too much in his final specification he misleads the public.

If we are right in our conclusion, that the provisional specification cannot be amended, by disclaimer or otherwise, after it has been allowed by the law officer, it seems that there is no remedy after allowance for an excess of statement or claim in the provisional specification; for the only disclaimer that can then be made is a disclaimer of part of the title or of part of the specification. It is possible, however, that a struggle may be made to remedy this great hardship, by allowing an alteration of the title of the patent, so framed as to exclude by express terms the matter wrongly claimed in the provisional specification. Such an alteration, as it would not extend the exclusive right granted by the letters-patent, would be within Lord Brougham's Act, and, being allowed by the law officer, might, upon a liberal construction, be held to operate on the provisional specification so as to exclude the objection.

If the provisional specification is defective, by not including enough, the defect must be cured by taking out a new patent for the omitted matter, in which it will generally be prudent to refer to the former patent, and expressly to exclude everything that is included in that. But it will be necessary also to prosecute the proceedings on the first provisional specification, because, by the abandonment of those proceedings, the invention described in and published by that specification will have been thrown open to the world. The public, looking at the first specification only, and finding that the proceedings upon it have been abandoned, would be entitled to conclude that the invention described in it had been also abandoned.

From all this, it appears that the framing of the provisional specification is a task of extreme difficulty and danger, and the correction of mistakes in it is no less so. The proper remedy seems to be, to allow a patentee to refer his final specification to the law officer, with authority to that officer to direct any alteration which he may think necessary to be made in the title of the invention, and to enact that no letters-patent for an invention, of which the complete specification shall have been allowed by the law officer, (with or without any amendment of the title of the invention), shall be impeached on the ground of any excess or defect of description, statement, or claim in the provisional specification.

LONDON, APRIL 8, 1854.

WE believe that the time has arrived when the question of legal education may be considered to some extent apart from the exclusive and peculiar interests of the Profession. No doubt it is a matter of great importance that we should possess in this country an order of advocates, distinguished by their learning, acquirements, and general ability—an order from which our judges are selected, and an order which has given many of our greatest statesmen and orators to Parliament. The question which has recently been suggested, rather than definitely stated, in Parliament, on this subject, is, whether it would not be possible so to improve the curriculum of legal education, by giving it a more general and scientific character, as to attract to the Legal University those young men who are candidates for appointments in some of the higher branches of the public service. This point was well put by the Solicitor-General in the course of the discussion which took place on Mr. Napier's motion for a commission to inquire into the system of legal education provided in the Inns of Court. The honourable and learned gentleman said "he hoped to see the time when a great Legal University would be constituted, to act in co-operation with Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, and the London University, the degree in which would be considered a test of competency previous to admission to certain of the more important of the public departments." It will be remembered that the Government of India Act of last session established the principle, that all appointments in the civil service, and in the scientific branches of the Indian army, should be thrown open to merit; and, acting on the same principle, Sir Charles Trevelyan and the Rev. Mr. Jowett have prepared a plan, somewhat of the same kind, with respect to the organisation of the civil service in this country. One portion of the plan, to which a great objection has been urged, is, that this immense mass of patronage would be practically transferred from the heads of departments to a board of examiners. Into this objection we do not propose to enter, for if a degree were received as a test of competency, the head of the department would be enabled to make his patronage and his responsibility still go together. Of course, we do not propose that every clerk in the Customs or in the Post-office should be a graduate well up in classics, mathematics, and in public and private law; we confine our observations to those departments of the public service in which a knowledge of law is not a mere gentlemanly accomplishment, but an absolute and indispensable necessity. Anciently England possessed a Legal University, which is described by Lord Coke "as the most famous university for the profession of the law, or of any human science, that is in the world, in which the readings and other exercises of the laws therein used, were so excellent and behoofful for attaining to the knowledge of these laws." When "the readings, mootings, lectures, and exercises," so much commended by Lord Coke, became mere forms, all scientific instruction in our own common law—which was "the best and most tion with Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, and the London University, the degree in which would be considered a test of competency previous to admission to certain of the more important of the public departments." It will be remembered that the Government of India Act of last session established the principle, that all appointments in the civil service, and in the scientific branches of the Indian army, should be thrown open to merit; and, acting on the same principle, Sir Charles Trevelyan and the Rev. When "the readings, mootings, lectures, and exercises," so much commended by Lord Coke, became mere forms, all scientific instruction in our own common law—which was "the best and most jurisprudence taught in the Legal University—may be said to have departed the realm. A system of instruction, however, insensibly and necessarily grew up, which was found convenient, and eminently successful in forming the mere technical lawyer—we mean the system of reading in chambers; and we could cite many illustrious instances of men of superior intellect and indefatigable industry, who, almost by their own unaided and undirected endeavours, by hard reading and the irksome task of copying pleadings, have become profound masters of particular branches of jurisprudence. Within the last ten years various attempts have been made to improve the system of instruction which exists in the different Inns of Court. Lecturers have been appointed, scholarships have been established for the most distinguished students—in short, a great improvement has been effected; but still the examination is not compulsory, and therefore any person who wishes to acquire the status of a barrister can do so by payment of a certain sum, by eating so many dinners, and by attending so many lectures. When he is called to the Bar, not the slightest test is required for the purpose of ascertaining whether he has ever opened a law book, or whether he knows the commonest principles of that Profession of which he is thus permitted to become a nominal and an honorary member. If we are to have an efficient system of legal education, the first measure will be to require an examination in all cases, as a test of competency; and the second will be to increase the number of the professors. The existing chairs are those of civil law, constitutional law, real property, equity and common law; to these there should be added chairs of commercial law, comparative law, international law, medical jurisprudence, and logic and rhetoric. It will readily be admitted that a knowledge of commercial law is most important in a country like England, with its enormous trade in every quarter of the world; and the events which are passing around us at the present time shew the absolute necessity which exists, not only that lawyers, but that our merchants generally, should be acquainted with those laws of war which affect so directly their personal interests. In the diplomatic and consular service, it is a matter of the highest importance that all attachés, secretaries of legation, and consuls should have a competent knowledge, not only of the municipal law of their own country, but of international law, commercial law, the interpretation of treaties, the rights of belligerents and neutrals, &c.; for it has sometimes happened that an individual in a subordinate position has been obliged, in the absence of his superior, to undertake, upon the instant, the conduct of most difficult and delicate negotiations. To clerks in the foreign and colonial office, as well as to candidates for diplomatic employment, the degree of the Legal University, we are persuaded, might be required with great advantage to the public service. With regard to medical jurisprudence, a knowledge of that most important subject is only to be acquired by attending medical jurisprudential lectures at some of the great hospitals; and this circumstance has, on many occasions, led the public to appoint members of the medical profession to the legal office of coroner, solely on account of their medical knowledge, and without regard to the important consideration, that a coroner should also be equally acquainted with the rules of evidence and the general principles of criminal law. Under the proposed measure for the establishment of public prosecutors, a course of this description would be most valuable, as well to magistrates as to all other persons concerned in the administration of criminal justice. This system would, in fact, be nothing more than a substantial reconstitution of the Inns of Court as a great Legal University. Fortescue, C. J., says, "that the Inns of Court consisted of two sets of collegiate houses—one called the Inns of Chancery, in which the younger students of the law were usually placed, learning and studying the originals, and, as it were, the elements and principles of the law, who profiting therein as they grew to ripeness, so were they admitted to the greater inns of the same study; and in these inns of both kinds, barons and knights, and other grandees and noblemen of the kingdom, were accustomed to place their children, though they did not desire to have them thoroughly learned in the law, or to get their living by its practice." We trust, therefore, that the effect of Mr. Napier's motion will be, not only to improve the course of instruction afforded in our Inns of Court, by enlarging its basis, and rendering it of a more scientific character, but that it will attract to the study of the law those public servants in the higher departments of the State, to whom, we repeat, some amount of legal knowledge is an absolute necessity. We would not, however, confine these advantages to the Legal University; we hope that Oxford, Cambridge, and the London University will offer to students the same course of instruction; and that, for the future, no man will have the opportunity of saying, as the Solicitor-General stated before Mr. Wyse's committee, "that it is obvious to every person who is thoroughly acquainted with the tone and manner of the education of young men, that their habits as students are directed by what you may denominate merely practical attainments; and that you can scarcely find an instance of a young man who has commenced his legal studies by laying anything like that broad foundation of the study of jurisprudence in such a manner as you would desire it to be done as a preparative to the practical details into which the student must almost immediately enter." In almost every other profession and calling a preliminary test of competency is required. The physician, the surgeon, the apothecary, the master of a ship, and the solicitor, are required to undergo some preliminary and compulsory examination, necessary both for themselves and for the benefit of the public at large; and we are at a loss to conceive on what principle an individual should be allowed to purchase the status of an advocate without the slightest or the most indefinite test of competency. Mr. Napier deserves the thanks of the Profession for having called the attention of Parliament to this subject; and we trust, that by means of the inquiry which is now to be instituted, the Inns of Court will at length be restored to their ancient and dignified position as integral portions of the Legal University, and that they will exercise that general and systematic control over the instruction of students which is as necessary for the interests of the Profession as for those of the public at large.

WE see with great pleasure, that in a bill which Lord Brougham is bringing forward for amending the practice of conveyancing, his Lordship proposes that the taxing of conveyancing charges, should be upon the quantum meruit rather than the length principle. We are also glad to see it stated by his Lordship that the Taxing Masters now look with approbation on that method of taxing. Beyond all question, more will be done by it towards shortening conveyances, than could be done by much more intricate devices. Lord Campbell suggested, and as we think very wisely, that if there were a high officer vested with sound discretion, who was to determine questions of this nature, it would be an unspeakable advantage. This, translated from the grandiloquent phraseology of Parliamentary style into plain English, means that the Taxing Master who is to tax in conveyancing business, should be a conveyancer of eminence, of great skill and experience; and unquestionably he should be so. If Lord Brougham's bill passes, either a part of it should provide for the appointment of a new Taxing Master for taxing in all cases of conveyancing business, and such Taxing Master should be some conveyancing counsel of great experience, or it should provide for the appointment of such a Taxing Master on the first vacancy. Assuming the office of Taxing Master to remain what it is, and to be always filled by a gentleman who has acquired eminence in the general practice of a solicitor, we quite agree with the remarks that fell from both Lord Campbell and the Lord Chancellor, that the difficulty would be very great; that there would be great difficulty in determining the relative amount of the skill and ability in each particular instance; and that it would be a very delicate matter to express any judgment upon such a question. No doubt it would, if a gentleman, whose peculiar field of operations has been the conduct of causes and the transaction of conveyancing business as a solicitor, were to be called upon to estimate the amount of difficulty in business which, as solicitor, he never transacted, but always laid before conveyancing counsel, because it was their special business, and was not his. We have no hesitation in saying, that unless Lord Brougham's measure does bring with it an alteration as to the qualifications required in a conveyancing Taxing Master, it will not work; but if it does bring with it such an alteration, it will work perfectly.

We have so often in this journal urged the improvement on the notice of the Profession, that we shall not go in detail again into the reasons in favour of it; but it may not be altogether useless to repeat, that to the Profession it is comparatively a matter of indifference. It is to the public that the change is the most important; to the Profession, we say, it is a matter comparatively of indifference. True, the conveyancing draftsman, whether counsel or solicitor, prepares many a draft—say, conditions of sale—for which, being difficult to draw, and necessarily, from the nature of the transaction, short, his remuneration is grossly inadequate. But then the next thing that comes before him is probably a common mortgage, or marriage settlement, which, being nearly all common form, gives scarcely any trouble, and produces a remuneration as much too great as that in the former case was too small. Taking, then, the average of drafts, and the same may be said of abstracts, the conveyancer reaps a fair remuneration for his toil; but then the operation on the unhappy public is this—that the man who gives his conveyancing solicitor or counsel scarcely any trouble at all, pays for the trouble given by another man who has not paid nearly enough; and that, we apprehend, is a system which, when once the public thoroughly understands, it will with great delight see abolished. The only real difficulty about working the system proposed (assuming the appointment of a first-class conveyancer as Taxing Master, without which, we repeat, it will be a dead letter) arises from the necessity which it will draw with it, as regards the business transacted by counsel, of counsel marking their own fees; because, of course, when a solicitor lays an abstract, or instructions for a draft, before counsel, he relieves himself from the labour of considering the case, and does not attempt to estimate its difficulty. Now, that is of no consequence if he is to pay counsel and charge his client with a fee measured by the number of pages read or written by the counsel; but if he is to pay him a fee measured by the difficulty, he must, of course, ask his counsel what the fee is to be, which, stripping the case of the mysterious and delicate intervention of the suggestion of counsel's clerks, amounts to conveyancing counsel marking their own fees. Now, this practice to some extent already obtains, but is far from general; is not much liked by conveyancing counsel; is affected to be considered as most inconvenient by all counsel not conveyancers; and is absolutely ignored at the height of the judgment-seat: so that there would be some difficulty in getting that part of the measure to work; and without it, of course, the whole thing would become a dead letter.

We apprehend, however, that after a time, and especially if the Taxing Master were really a master of his art, so that a conveyancer might reasonably submit himself to his judgment, conveyancing counsel will find such increased comfort and advantage from their fees being measured by the difficulty of the labour they have gone through, that they will in practice aid the working of Lord Brougham's act, should it pass into law.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE STATE OF PROCEDURE IN THE COURT OF CHANCERY.

It is beyond doubt that the procedure and practice of the Court of Chancery have been very much improved within the last few years; but it is equally beyond doubt that much remains to be done to make it what it ought to be and may be. We speak on this with some degree of boldness and confidence, not only because we have paid great attention to the subject of Chancery reform for a considerable number of years, but because we have long laboured in a humble way, as contributors to the legal literature of the day, to assist in forwarding many of the views which more distinguished men have, after mature consideration, thought fit to be adopted in practice.

The first subject to which we will refer, because, in our opinion, it is, as regards procedure, the most important, and because it is one on which many very able and learned men entertain very strong doubts, is the mode of taking evidence in Chancery. At present there are three methods of taking evidence—by affidavit without any oral examination; by affidavit combined with oral cross-examination and re-examination; and by oral examination entirely.

The first method is common to the hearing of causes and of interlocutory applications. It may be used in its integrity either at the hearing or trial of a cause, or on any interlocutory application in the cause. The second and third methods can only be used for the hearing of a cause; they cannot be used at all, except by consent, on an interlocutory application. Now, we may observe, in passing, that this difference between the mode of hearing the cause, and hearing interlocutory proceedings in it, is objectionable. Eliciting the whole truth is quite as essential on motions as at the hearing of a cause; and whatever machinery is thought requisite for one, should be equally applicable—we do not say always applied, but equally applicable to the other. However, without stopping to discuss that point with any detail, we proceed to the principal objection, which appears to us to go to the entire mode of taking oral evidence in Chancery. On that part of the subject it seems to us that the perpetuation of examiners in Chancery, by the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, was a great mistake, and that the sooner the mistake is rectified the better. As a general rule, the principle of examining witnesses before one tribunal for the purpose of recording their evidence, and afterwards using it in a written state before another, is not sound, and leads to infinite expense and inconvenience; and wherever special circumstances do not exist to make it either impracticable, or so inconvenient as to be in effect impracticable, witnesses should be in Chancery, as at common law, examined orally in open court, at the trial, before the judges who try the case. To this rule there will of course be exceptions. We speak only of what should be the general rule.

That, for the purpose of eliciting the truth, oral examination, properly conducted, is superior to any kind of merely written examination, we shall not stop to argue; it has always been admitted to be so by all but Chancery lawyers; and the point was conceded by Chancery lawyers when they introduced it under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86. The only question is, how it is to be used.

Now, the way it is used in Chancery at present is this:—The witnesses are examined by counsel before the examiners in a private office, to which none are admitted but the witnesses and the solicitors and counsel. The examiner is furnished with a copy of the pleadings, which may or may not give him information of the case made on both sides, as now there may or may not be an answer. But assuming that the pleadings do inform the examiner of the nature of the case made by each side, his attention is not very vigorously drawn to it, because he is to decide nothing. He is to hear no argument either on the law or on the merits of the case. He is not even to decide what evidence is either material or relevant. So that everything that an act of Parliament could do to make him the listless listener—the examining machine, which the old Chancery examiner was—has been done, and he is armed with as little power as possible to check exuberant and irrelevant examination. The result is, as might have been anticipated, that immense quantities of irrelevant and improper evidence are taken down and recorded, and go to swell the bulk of the briefs on which the case is ultimately heard. The mere taking of all this evidence would be of no great consequence, beyond the expense incurred in the unnecessary prolongation of the examination, if it were not permanently recorded; but being permanently recorded, it plays the part of the old formal Chancery bills and answers and depositions, and makes heavy briefs, for the writing and the reading of which the suitor has to pay, although five-sixths of the matter written and to be read are generally absolutely useless. That is one serious objection to taking the evidence, as a general practice, before examiners.

The next objection to it is, that it deprives oral examination of that which all common lawyers agree, and which all ordinary observation shews, is the very essence of its value, viz. the effect on the sense of responsibility of the witness, by his subjection to an examination in public, and the effect on the judge, who is in possession of the case as it proceeds, and who has to decide it, of having the opportunity of observing the personal demeanour of the witness. The remedy seems at first simple enough, viz. to abolish altogether the preliminary examination in the examiner's office, and to have the witnesses in a Chancery cause, when examined orally at all, examined just on the same principle and in the same manner as they are on a trial at Nisi Prius.

It is said, however, that there are great difficulties in the way of adopting that course of procedure.

First, it is said that so much time would be taken up on trials, that they would never come to an end, unless at least half-a-dozen more Vice-Chancellors were created.

Secondly, it is said that the expense of bringing witnesses up to town, and keeping them in town, for causes originally in the country, and requiring country witnesses, would be frightful.

Thirdly, it is said that Chancery causes would not be tried with that decorum—with that steady and solemn deliberation, with which they are now tried, and without which, it is urged, satisfactory decisions could not be arrived at.

These are, we think, the principal objections; at least, we are not apprised of any other material objections.

Now, in answer to the first, we say this—

1. It is not at all clear that a great deal more time would be occupied in trials, taking them in the aggregate, than is now occupied; not that the taking of oral evidence, if no other is taken, would not occupy more time than the reading of selected portions of recorded evidence, but that when evidence is taken at once orally, it very frequently happens that a case breaks down, as it is technically called, by the sudden apparition of evidence damning to the one side or to the other, which evidence might never be elicited at all before an examiner, where the cause is not actually being tried; or to which, if elicited, counsel for the party damaged takes good care not to refer, so that sometimes it never makes its appearance at all, and at any rate frequently does not do so till the case has been half gone through.

2. If evidence in a Chancery cause were taken primarily (as it would probably almost always be if the matter were left to the parties) upon affidavit, and the witnesses only cross-examined and re-examined orally on their affidavits, the oral examination would be confined to the really material points, counsel being previously in possession of the general case on both sides; and the oral examination would not, in general, be lengthy.

3. Those who have had experience in Chancery causes know well that in them, in general, a very large portion of the case depends on both sides on documentary evidence, and that the examination of numerous witnesses is rarely necessary. We except, of course, interlocutory motions, where facts are in controversy, and cases of alleged fraud turning on the acts of the parties. But these do not constitute the principal part of Chancery proceedings. However, we will assume that more time, and considerably more time, would be occupied in court, and that two—perhaps three or four—additional judges might be required; what then? The business would be done in court, instead of out of court. Judges and their staff would have to be provided and paid by the public, instead of examiners and their staff. More time would be consumed in court, but there would be proportionably less time consumed by everybody out of court. Stationers would not have to be paid for copying again and again folios upon folios of irrelevant matter, nor would counsel and solicitors have to be paid for reading it. What would be expended in time and cost in useful labour in court, would be more than saved by excluding masses of utterly useless labour out of court; and the public would still be the gainers, even in point of expense. But even supposing greater expense to be thrown on the public—after all, it is not a question of mere pounds, shillings, and pence: it is a question how justice is most completely to be administered; and if it be proved that the truth would be better elicited in Chancery, as well as at common law, by examining witnesses orally at the trial, we should indeed deserve, and in its worst sense, the name of “a nation of shopkeepers,” if we hesitated at adopting the better system because it would cost a little more. We have departed from the barbarism of giving to our armies the old flint-lock muskets, instead of the modern improved firearms; let us not be less wise in our generation in reference to the arming of our Courts of equity with the species of artillery which they require.

We pass now to the second objection.

That is an objection dependent upon special external circumstances. Ex concessis, it applies only to country causes, and it presents really but little difficulty, notwithstanding its apparent plausibility. If, in any cause, there are witnesses to be brought from the country, the bringing and retaining of whom in town till the trial, would cause great expense, it only comes to this—that the parties must, by the force of circumstances, over which no system of procedure can be perfect enough to exercise an absolute control, elect whether they will adopt the more perfect method of taking evidence, with its concomitant evil, expense, or whether they will rather forego it for the sake of economy, and adopt the less perfect method. Either party should in such a case be at liberty to have a special examiner to examine his country witnesses; and the other party should be at liberty either to cross-examine them before the examiner, or, if he prefers it, to bring them to town at his own expense, to cross-examine them at the trial. By such a simple arrangement would that objection be removed. It resolves itself, in effect, into this—that the benefit of oral examination in court could not conveniently be adopted for a certain class of cases. Be it so; and let that class of cases be exceptional, and exempted wholly or partially from its operation.

We come now to the third objection, which is like the second, much more plausible than substantial.

It really proceeds on a false assumption, viz. that causes are heard with any very extraordinary degree of solemnity and deliberation in Chancery, as compared with trials at Nisi Prius. How equity causes were heard tempore Hardwicke, tradition saith not; how they were heard tempore Eldon, we are not old enough to remember—possibly they were then heard with very great solemnity; with a deliberation productive of anything but satisfaction they certainly were heard, if we are to believe the biographers of that great but over-cunctative judge. But at this day, under the system administered for the last fifteen years, the hearing of equity causes has certainly not been marked with any solemnity or deliberation not to be seen in every superior court of justice in cases of like importance. We do not mean to say that a cause turning on the construction of a difficult will, or a case of specific performance involving abstruse questions of title, or a case involving the setting aside important deeds for fraud or undue pressure, &c., are not heard in Chancery with more of solemnity and deliberation than are to be seen at Nisi Prius in a running-down case, or a case of breach of promise of marriage, in bucolic localities, between a disconsolate serving damsel of twenty-two, and a mature but substantial farmer of fifty. But we say that any one who has attended a Nisi Prius trial on serious and important commercial questions, or on any questions, whether turning on commercial or personal rights, as serious as those which form the staple of Chancery causes, will not have found any great difference between the deliberation with which a trial at Nisi Prius is conducted, and that which is to be seen on the hearing of a modern equity cause. In truth, the deliberation—the care—with which a trial of any kind is conducted, depends, not so much on the mode of procedure, as on the character of the cause and of the tribunal. It is not because evidence is taken orally at the trial, that so many Nisi Prius trials are hurried through with apparent haste and want of deliberation, but because in so many Nisi Prius trials the subject-matter is such as to require very little deliberation. Let the subject be one of grave and difficult character, and the trial at Nisi Prius ceases to be hasty. So, in equity, there is little room to fear that the introduction of oral evidence would have the effect of the causes being heard with less care and deliberation than they now are, while the subjects remain as serious and as difficult as they now are.

We have now stated our reasons for the introduction of a different mode of taking the evidence in equity, and the answers which appear to us to meet the objections usually suggested. It remains only, on this branch of the subject, to say what practical mode of proceeding we should recommend; otherwise we should be obnoxious to the ordinary observation, that it is easier to find a general fault than suggest a specific remedy.

What we recommend, then, is this—

1. That parties to a Chancery suit should be at liberty to go into evidence, in the first instance, either on an interlocutory application, or for the hearing of the cause, as they now do on interlocutory applications—that is, upon affidavits, original, in reply, in counter reply, &c.; that every party should be at liberty at the hearing of either an interlocutory application, or at the hearing of the cause, (without any application to the judge being necessary), to cross-examine orally any of his opponent's witnesses, the opponent, of course, having a right orally to examine.

2. That no party should be obliged to commence by affidavit either on an interlocutory application or at the hearing, but should have a right, if he thinks fit, to commence at once by oral examination of his witnesses in court, subject, of course, to cross-examination and re-examination.

3. That the examiners' offices should be abolished, and that there should be no such thing as preliminary oral examination, except in cases where the witness, by reason of illness, great distance, great age, or the like, cannot be brought up for the trial; and that in such cases only special examiners should be appointed to take the evidence, as is now done.

Before quitting the subject of evidence, we may observe, although the subject does not strictly relate to equity proceeding, that it is a great defect in the existing practice under the law of patents, that the Attorney and Solicitor General have no power to administer an oath on hearing an opposition to the grant of a patent, and that consequently such business (which is always of the most litigious character, and mostly involves as great an amount of contradictory evidence as the most intense running-down case) has to be heard on affidavits alone; or, what is still worse, the oral examination of the parties and their witnesses without oath. The law officers, (and the Lord Chancellor on appeals from them), upon oppositions to the grant of patents, ought to have power to administer an oath, so that parties and witnesses might be examined orally in such cases. They really are trials, and very serious trials, of very difficult questions, involving very important rights.

LONDON, APRIL 22, 1854.

QUESTIONS connected with the reparation of property are of every-day occurrence, and they affect not only the wide-spread relation of landlord and tenant, but also their liabilities with reference to third persons.

The following rules may be regarded as fixed by the decisions upon this subject:—

First, in the absence of any agreement to repair, a tenant, for whatever term he may hold the premises, is not bound to do more than to keep them wind and water tight. (Wise v. Metcalfe, 10 B. & Cr. 312).

Secondly, in the absence of an agreement by the landlord to repair, he is not bound to do any repairs as regards the tenant. This was decided in the recent case of Gott and Another v. Gandy, (18 Jur., part 1, p. 310; 23 L. J., Q. B., 1). There a declaration, stating that the plaintiff was the defendant's tenant from year to year of a house, that during the tenancy a chimney, without the plaintiff's default, became out of repair, and that the defendant after notice refused to repair it, whereby it fell during the tenancy and injured the house, was held bad on demurrer.

Thirdly, in the absence of any such agreement by the landlord to repair, the tenant remains liable for rent, even though the premises should be rendered uninhabitable for want of repair, (Arden v. Pullen, 10
 M. & W. 321), or are destroyed by fire; (Belfour v.
Weston, 1 T. R. 310; Baker v. Holtzpfaff, 4 Taunt.
 45); and even if there be an agreement by the landlord to repair, his breach thereof does not justify the tenant in quitting the premises, so as to exempt him from the payment of rent. (Surplice v. Farnsworth, 7 Mac. & G. 576). The tenancy still continues, and the tenant has his remedy against the landlord for breach of his agreement.

Fourthly, if there is an express agreement on either side, then, according to the maxim, "expressio facit cessare tacitum," the liabilities of the parties are measured thereby, and all implied liability is excluded.
 (Standen v. Christmas, 10 Q. B. 135).

Fifthly, where a party enters into possession under a lease which is void under the Statute of Frauds, or as being an invalid execution of a power, but which lease contains a covenant to repair, he is still liable to repair according to such covenant. (Richardson v. Gifford, 1 Ad. & El. 52; Beale v. Sanders, 5 Scott, 58).

Sixthly, whether, where a lease has been executed by the lessee, but not by the lessor, and the former has entered and enjoyed the premises during the whole of the intended term, he is liable on a covenant to repair

during the term, appears to be vexata quæstio. (Pitman v. Woodbury, 3 Exch. 4, 13; Cooch v. Goodman, 2 Q. B. 580, 599). The Court of Exchequer, in Pitman v. Woodbury, seemed to be of opinion that in such a case, the term itself not being created, the covenant dependent on such term was void altogether. (See also to this effect Swatman v. Ambler, 22 L. J., Ex., 81).

Seventhly, as to the extent of liability upon an express agreement to repair, the age and class of the premises may be taken into estimation. (Paine v. Haine, 16 M. & W. 541). Under an agreement to keep and to deliver up the premises in good repair, the tenant must put them into good repair, and is not justified in keeping them in bad repair because he found them in that condition; (Ib.); and if the agreement be unconditional, he must rebuild them, even if the premises be destroyed by fire or other accident. If a tenant refuse to repair according to his agreement, and his landlord—who is himself a lessee, and bound, under pain of forfeiture, to keep them in repair—enter and repair them, the measure of damages is the sum necessarily expended in putting them into repair, and not the costs of an action brought by the ground landlord against the meane landlord for non-repair, unless the underlease contain a covenant to indemnify. (Logan v. Hall, 4 C. B. 598; Colley v. Streeton, 2 B. & Cr. 273). In an action by a lessee against an assignee of premises for non-repair, it appeared that the plaintiff in 1843 assigned the lease to the defendant; that in October, 1851, the defendant assigned to one T.; that in June, 1852, T. assigned to H. Evidence was given for the plaintiff, that when H. held the lease the premises were out of repair, and T. stated he put the premises in no better state than when he received them from the defendant. No further evidence was given, and the defendant was not called as a witness. It was held that the judge was right in directing the jury to give substantial damages, and that the jury were warranted in presuming that the dilapidations took place during the time that the defendant held the lease. (Smith v. Peat; 9 Exch. 161). Parke, B., referred to Lord Holt's opinion, that the measure of damages was the amount it would require to put the premises into repair, but said that view had been departed from, and that Coleridge, J., had ruled that the amount of damages was the amount of injury done to the possession by the premises being out of repair. Martin, B., said, "In my opinion the measure of damages is the loss the landlord would undergo if he sold his reversion in the market."

Eighthly, a covenant to repair runs with the land, so as to bind the assignee of the land or the reversioner, (Martyn v. Clue, 22 L. J., Q. B., 147, where the question, as to allowance of timber being a condition precedent under the terms of the lease, was also considered), provided it is contained in an instrument under seal, but otherwise not. (Standen v. Christmas, 10 Q. B. 135). In the latter case, the party to the agreement may sue the other party to it for non-repair, though the former may have assigned the reversion. (Bickford v. Parson, 5 C. B. 920).

Ninthly, an important question, not finally settled, is the liability of a landlord or his tenant for an injury caused to a third person by want of repair of the premises. In Gott v. Gandy, (supra), on its being said by counsel, that there being no agreement on the part of the tenant to repair, the landlord would have been liable to a passer-by injured by the falling of a chimney, &c., Lord Campbell, C. J., asked, "Has that ever been decided?" The doctrine of liability of owners of fixed property for injuries to others was much considered in Reedie v. The London and North-western Railway Company, (4 Exch. 244).

Upon principle, it would seem that the party on whom the duty to repair the premises is cast is liable to third persons for an injury caused by non-repair—that is, the party who has expressly agreed to repair them; and in the absence of any agreement, the owner of the property would probably be liable, it being a burthen incident to property that it should be kept in a safe condition as regards the public; and as the person injured has no means of knowing whether the tenant had agreed to repair or not, his remedy in all cases probably would be against the owner, who, if he had bound his tenant to repair, could enforce such liability against him. It may be said, if the owner is liable to a third party for injury thus caused, why should he not be liable to the tenant? The distinction, however, is obvious, as tenants have an opportunity of inquiring into the state of the premises, and need not become tenants unless they are satisfied to take the risk. (See remarks of the Court in Gott v. Gandy, supra, and in Seymour v. Maddox, 16 Q. B. 326; 15 Jur., part 1, p. 723).

It is not out of place to state briefly the rules of the French law upon the subject of repairs as between landlord and tenant. In the Code Civil, b. 3, tit. 8, art. 1719, 1720, 1754—1756, it is declared that "the lessor is bound by the nature of the contract, and without the necessity of any particular stipulation, to maintain the thing demised in a state fit for the purpose for which it was taken. The lessor is bound to deliver the thing in a state of complete repair. He must make in it, during the continuance of the lease, all the reparations which may become necessary, other than tenant's repairs. Tenant's repairs, or ordinary reparations, to which the lessee is bound, if there be no agreement to the contrary, are those marked out as such by the usage of places; and, among others, the reparations to be made are—to hearths, chimney-backs, jambs, and chimney-pieces; to the plastering of the bottom of the walls of apartments, and other places of habitation, to the height of a metre; to the pavement of chambers, when some of it only is broken; to glass, unless it be broken by hail, or other extraordinary accidents, or superior force, for which the tenant shall not be responsible; to doors, casements, bars or shutters of shops, hinges, window-bolts, and locks. None of the reparations deemed to belong to tenants are chargeable on lessees when they are only occasioned by age or superior force. The cleansing of wells and privies are charges of the lessor, if there be no agreement to the contrary."

A WIFE'S EQUITY AGAINST HER HUSBAND'S ASSIGNEE FOR VALUE.

In Tidd v. Lister, (10 Hare, 140), Sir G. J. Turner, V. C., decided, according to the learned reporter's marginal note, that a married woman, whose husband does not maintain her, is not entitled, as against a particular assignee of the husband, to maintenance out of the income of the real and personal estate to which she was entitled in equity for her life; or, (as the marginal note proceeds to state), "as against purchasers from the husband of the life interest of the wife, equity will follow the law which gives to the husband the power of dealing with the income of his wife's property, and will not put in force the rule, that he who comes into equity must do equity, whereby purchasers would be involved in inquiries into the relations between husband and wife, their property, and means of maintenance." And this decision has been affirmed by the Lord Chancellor. The marginal note appears to state correctly the decision and the doctrine of the Court. The petitioner, Elizabeth Tidd, was, under her father's will, equitably entitled for her life to the income of freehold, copyhold, and personal estates. She married W. Tidd after her father's death, without a settlement. A bill was filed to have the estate administered, and a receiver was appointed, who, by a subsequent order, was directed to pay the balance of the income, after defraying certain outgoings, to W. Tidd and Elizabeth his wife, or to the wife alone, if she survived, until further order. In the meantime, Tidd and his wife had joined in a security, by lease and release, fine, and covenant to surrender the devised copyholds, which, for a pecuniary consideration paid by H. Begborough to W. Tidd, purported to charge an annuity in favour of Begborough on Mrs. Tidd's life interest. Afterwards a mortgage of Mrs. Tidd's life interest was made, by similar assurances, in favour of Mary Basil. Subsequently Mrs. Tidd presented a petition, stating that for many years her husband had not maintained her; that he was then receiving parochial relief; and asking that the receiver might be directed to pay the whole of the income of the trust property to her, except as to the income arising from the freeholds, if it should appear that she had effectually conveyed her interest in the freeholds. The petition was dismissed, but, having regard to what fell from the Court in Wilkinson v. Charlesworth, (10 Beav. 324), without costs.

The case was decided on the authority of Elliott v. Cordell (5 Mad. 149) and Stanton v. Hall, (2 Russ. & M. 175), and on reasoning which may be thus stated from the Lord Chancellor's judgment:—"When the interest of the wife is a sum in gross, the wife's equity attaches for the benefit of herself and her children. There is no doubt or ambiguity about the principle; the relation alone gives her the right, and no purchaser can be deceived. The case is not the same where the Court has to deal with a life interest. As between the husband and wife, the Court never deprives him of the income of the fund with a view of making a settlement on the wife, but follows the course of the common law in giving the husband the fund. By marriage and duty he becomes the purchaser of that which is naturally applicable to their joint maintenance. If, indeed, he fail in the discharge of his duty—if he deserts her—this Court will not help him to get at the fund. But this is done only because the husband has failed to perform his duties. Now, to involve a purchaser of the wife's life interest in inquiries how far the husband may be doing his duty in disposing of his wife's interest would be highly inconvenient." So far his Lordship seemed to be perfectly satisfied with the decision on principle; but he proceeded to hint that the distinction might not be altogether satisfactory, and finally relied on the inexpediency of disturbing the authorities.

But whether the authorities are in a perfectly settled state may be a question. Elliott v. Cordell and Stanton v. Hall fully support the decision and doctrine in Tidd v. Lister. There is, however, a case of Wortham v. Pemberton, (1 De G. & S. 644), in which the doctrine that the husband is entitled to receive or to assign his wife's life income, if he is not insolvent, was rejected. There a bill was filed by a married woman, legal tenant in tail, subject to a jointure term, seeking, as against her husband, a settlement of the income to which she was entitled as tenant in tail; and a settlement during the joint lives of the husband and wife, if the term should so long endure, was directed, without any question being made of the husband's solvency or ability to maintain his wife. Sir J. L. Knight Bruce, V. C., said, "There is so much of moral justice, and so much fairness and convenience, in the Lord Chancellor's decision in Sturges v. Champneys, (5 My. & C. 102), that it would, I suppose, be a matter of general regret if it were held by the House of Lords not to be according to law." Here, then, is a decision that the wife has a right to a settlement out of her life income when she comes as a plaintiff, and not on the ground of her husband's desertion or insolvency, or by help of the rule that he who asks equity must do equity, which was the ground upon which, in Sturges v. Champneys, the wife's equity was enforced against the husband's assignees in insolvency, applying to have a term taken out of the way. Lord Cottenham, however, expressly recognised the authority of those cases in which the equity was allowed to the wife, claiming it as plaintiff. "Equity," said his Lordship, "though it follows the law, and therefore gives to the husband or his assignee the life estate of the wife, yet it withholds its assistance for the purpose until it has secured to the wife the means of subsistence." If this be the principle, and if, as is settled, this equity is enforced against the husband's assignees in insolvency, or even his assignees under a voluntary disposition for the benefit of creditors, (Pryor v. Hill, 4 Bro. C. C. 139), in the case of a life income, is it not absurd to say that there is a distinction between a particular assignee and creditors in the case of a life income, though there is none in the case of a gross sum? Surely the equity of the wife is as good as the equity of her children; or if it be not, then a wife without children; and past the age of childbearing, would have no equity against a particular assignee, even of a gross sum. Even in the case of a life income, the wife's children may be as much interested in its preservation as herself. And where can be the difference between insolvency at the time of the assignment, and insolvency subsequent to it? The presumption is, that the husband has exhausted his own means before he lays his hands by anticipation on his wife's income. His wife would be protected against the claims of his creditors generally, but not against one of those creditors claiming under an assignment made the day before the bankruptcy. "It would be inconvenient that purchasers should become involved in inquiries into the relations between husband and wife," &c. With all respect to the Court, we must say that such an argument scarcely deserves notice. If it were worth attention, it would have equal force against the wife's claim in respect of a gross sum. No doubt the wife's equity is an inconvenient obstacle in the way of dealings with her property; and it was intended to be so, in order to prevent a greater inconvenience—her own and her children's destitution.

This absurd distinction between a life interest and a gross sum is, in fact, a mere remnant of the distinction formerly insisted upon, but, after much fluctuation of authority, at length exploded, between the husband's general assignees for creditors and his particular assignee. (See 1 Rep. Husb. & Wife, 268 et seq.)

As between the husband himself and the wife, there is a shew of reason (or rather of consistency) in saying, that, so long as he lives with and maintains her, he shall receive her income. That reason ceases when, by assigning it over to a stranger, he puts that source of maintenance out of his power. But even as against the husband himself, not insolvent or deserting his wife, we have seen that a settlement of the life income will be enforced; (Wortham v. Pemberton); and it has never been pretended that the assignee can be in a better position than the husband was in at the time of the assignment. Again: if the husband is entitled to the wife's income as a fund for their joint maintenance, and is entitled to assign it, he should be equally entitled to assign the income of a gross fund belonging to the wife. But the settlement directed against an assignee always includes the income.

In Wilkinson v. Charlesworth and Marsack v. Lister (10 Beav. 324) the doctrine was laid down in the only way in which, as we conceive, it can be laid down without inconsistency; and the Master of the Rolls distinctly asserted the existence of the wife's equity in respect of her life income—"It has been, as far as I know, the constant practice in this court to give effect to the equity of the wife in respect of her life interest." After referring to the argument, that the husband is a purchaser of his wife's life income, his Lordship said, "The whole argument is at variance with the ordinary practice of this Court. When a husband applies for payment of money, either principal or interest, to which he is entitled in right of his wife, the first questions are—whether the money for which he asks is subject to any settlement already made; and, if not, whether the wife consents to the payment desired being made to her husband. If she does not, the next question is, what settlement should be made; and if necessary, it is referred to the Master to inquire into the subject. Except under special circumstances, she has not been held entitled to have the whole of the capital fund settled upon herself and her children, or to have the whole of her income secured to be paid to herself alone, wholly excluding her husband; and there may be cases in which, under the circumstances, she may not be held entitled to have any settlement made out of the particular fund in question. . . . But the title of the husband having been considered subject to the wife's equity to a settlement, the matter is always inquired into." His Lordship then observed, that the observations of Lord Hardwicke in Bond v. Simons, (3 Atk. 20), and of Sir T. Clarke in Sleech v. Torrington, (2 Ves. sen. 560), were probably founded on the notion, since overruled, that the life interest of the wife was not a subject upon which her equity for a settlement could attach; but it is now settled, that the husband is not entitled to his wife's life interest otherwise than subject to her equity for a settlement.

It thus appears that the doctrine in Elliott v. Cordell and Tidd v. Lister is not only wholly untenable upon principle, but also contrary to very respectable authority.

INCOME TAX.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—I am not sure that this comes within the limits of THE JURIST, although the subject is one in which the Profession are interested, particularly now that we have an increased and increasing income tax in prospect; if it does, I shall feel obliged by its insertion.

In making my return for assessment to the income tax, I deducted the average loss on my law books. On appeal to the special commissioners, they refused to allow me any deduction whatever. Such, it appears, is their rule; but it is, I submit, unauthorised by the act.

By the third rule, sect. 100 of the act, for estimating the balance of profits and gains in the case of a trade, &c., and which, as far as applicable, is extended to professions, it is declared, "that no deduction shall be made for any sum expended for the supply, or repairs, or alterations of any implements, utensils, or articles employed for the purpose of such trade, &c. beyond the sum usually expended for such purposes according to an average of the three years preceding." That is, that the average sum so expended may be deducted. Now, what are law books but articles employed for professional purposes? and when old works or old editions become useless, and new ones are purchased, what is that but a supply or reparation for those purposes, as strictly as a new boiler to a steam-engine is for the purposes of a manufacturer?

Take, for instance, those most useful and, in the present state of reporting, indispensable publications, the annual and other indexes to the Reports—they must be continually renewed. I have just replaced my Chitty's Equity Index; the old edition is not worth more shillings than it cost pounds; yet the commissioners tell me neither the loss upon the old nor the cost of the new is a sum expended for the purpose of my profession. It would puzzle any one to say for what other purpose it was expended. Everybody knows that upon a law library of moderate extent a hundred pounds is spent and lost in a very few years: to treat that loss as no diminution of professional profits is manifestly absurd; yet the commissioners so construe the act.

MR. SERJEANT STEPHEN'S NEW COMMENTARIES ON THE LAWS OF ENGLAND.—THIRD EDITION.

Just published, in 4 vols. 8vo., 4*l.* 4*s.* cloth, (dedicated, by permission, to Her Majesty the Queen).

NEW COMMENTARIES on the LAWS OF ENGLAND, in which are interwoven, under a new and original Arrangement of the general Subject, all such parts of the WORK of BLACKSTONE as are applicable to the present times; together with full but compendious Expositions of the Modern Improvements of the Law up to the latest period, the original and adopted materials being throughout the Work typographically distinguished from each other. By HENRY JOHN STEPHEN, Serjeant at Law. Third Edition. Prepared for the Press by JAMES STEPHEN, of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law, and Professor of English Law, &c. at King's College, London.

From the Law Magazine.—"We have long regarded this as the most valuable law book extant. We make no exception. We believe, moreover, the labour saved to the student by this work to be invaluable. Nor are we sure that any amount of labour could give him the same comprehensive insight to the science he is about to enter upon. It is the grammar of the law. It is sheer nonsense to talk of the worth of Blackstone now-a-days. We undertake to say that the student who should read him now would have to unread half the work contains, and add as much more to his information when he had exhausted all that Blackstone knew. This results not merely from the changes which have since taken place, but from the diffuse and often verbose style in which Blackstone wrote his very faulty work, which it has been the fashion of a comparatively illiterate age to laud and extol. We venture to suggest to Serjeant Stephen to discard Blackstone altogether, and to rewrite the passages he has modestly but injudiciously interpolated in his own infinitely superior composition. We may here allude to the great care taken by Mr. James Stephen, to whom much credit is due for the intelligent seal and diligence he has evinced in preparing this edition of Stephen's Commentaries for the press."

From the Legal Observer.—"We welcome a new and third edition of Mr. Serjeant Stephen's Commentaries on the Laws of England, founded on the text of Blackstone. In this edition the learned author has been ably assisted by his son, Mr. James Stephen. They have, with great diligence and accuracy, digested the chief alterations in the law since the last edition of the work—a task of great difficulty, requiring no ordinary knowledge of the law as it was and as it is, with an extraordinary power of condensing and arranging the changes which have been effected in nearly all departments of our judicial system from year to year. The arduous task of this new edition has been ably performed. We know not any work which, taken as a whole, can be compared with the Commentaries as the first introduction to the study of the Laws of England, whether for the use of the lawyer, the legislator, or the private gentleman."

From the Justice of the Peace.—"To speak in terms of approbation of a work on which the fiat of public opinion has so unmistakably set its stamp would be altogether an act of supererogation. Every one knows that the last four or five years have been a stirring time in the way of legal reform. He will therefore be quite prepared to learn that the present edition of the New Commentaries bears the mark of alteration, either in text or note, in almost every chapter throughout the work, if not in every page. We honestly and heartily advise him to turn to the work itself, and he will find that it not only contains the latest information upon almost every subject he may require to be informed upon, but that, as in former editions so in this, whatever is handled is treated in that perspicuous and scientific manner which has hitherto contributed to extend the reputation of the New Commentaries."

From the Law Times.—"Assuming that all prudent practitioners and students will wash their hands of the past, and begin to form small practical libraries entirely of the recent law, they could not find a better foundation than this third and new edition of Serjeant Stephen's Commentaries, which has been moulded throughout to the present state of the law, and comprises all the recent alterations. Every lawyer knows the worth of this famous work as it came from the hands of its author: we can assure them that it has lost none of its value in the hands of his son, who has performed his laborious task of editing all, and rewriting much, with the same care, the same industry, the same mastery of the principles of our law, and in the same clear and graceful style, that recommended the compositions of his father to popularity, even more than the fulness of learning, without its parade, that distinguishes these Commentaries. We heartily recommend these Commentaries as beyond measure the best book that has ever appeared to form a foundation for the study of the Law of England."

LONDON, APRIL 29, 1854.

WE continue in this part of THE JURIST the observations which were commenced in a former number, (see ante, p. 122), on the state of procedure in the Court of Chancery.

The next material defect of the Court of Chancery is its want of power directly to compel an act to be done, and its total want of power to give damages.

The Court of Chancery has continually to decide cases in which the question is, whether one person is doing some act in breach of his contract with another person, or another set of persons—as whether a railway company, in building a station on the edge of my meadow, or in throwing up an embankment right in front of my house, or the like, is committing a breach of its parliamentary contract with me, as one of the public. Now, if I can get to the Court of Chancery before the company has done anything material, I may obtain an injunction, and stop them from going on. But if, for any of the thousand reasons that in the business of this world cause delays, I have been unable to get to the Court before they have completed their work, it passes the power of the Court of Chancery to order them directly to remove it. True, the Court has got into the habit of granting what it terms mandatory injunctions—that is, injunctions restraining a party from continuing to let a thing remain in its existing state; but, independently of the theoretical clumsiness of the expedient, the practical enforcing of such an order is accompanied with so many difficulties, that we believe there is no instance on record of its operating otherwise than by bringing about a compromise. But however that may be, and assuming the mandatory injunction to be fully effective, there has been no attempt to carry it beyond ordering the restoration of things to a pre-existing state: thus, somewhat trifling repairs have been ordered by injunction; (Lane v. Newdegate, 10 Ves. 192); so, by injunction, excavations improperly made have been ordered to be filled up. (1 Railw. Cas. 169; Lord Mexborough v. Bowes, 7 Beav. 127). But we are not apprised of any attempt to enforce by mandatory injunction the performance of a specific, substantial, and extensive act agreed to be done. Thus, suppose a builder agrees to build a house according to a given plan and specification, there is no rational ground why he should not be compellable to perform that agreement, and no more real difficulty about it than in compelling a man to execute a conveyance; but such an agreement the Court of Chancery has no power specifically to enforce, directly or indirectly.

Now, it seems to us impossible to distinguish, on any sound and rational principle, this class of cases from cases within the ordinary jurisdiction of enforcing specific performance. A man is as much bound to build a house, if he agrees to do it, as he is to convey his estate, if he has agreed so to do. A company is as much bound to make its railroad on the wide gauge, if it has agreed so to do, as it would be to transfer Columbian bonds, if to do that was the contract; and it is as easy practically to enforce performance of the one contract as of the other. No doubt there are cases of exception, when the Court should abstain from attempting to enforce specific performance, because practically it cannot estimate what is performance, and therefore any order would be a perpetual source of conflict between the law and the subject, derogatory and injurious to the administration of justice. Of this class are the cases of acting, singing, writing a book, and the like. The Court does not attempt to enforce performance of contracts to do these things, not because it would be more beyond its power or more absurd to commit a man for contempt for breaking such a contract than for breaking any other contract, but because it is impossible to ascertain what is willfully breaking such a contract. There is a measure of what is breaking a contract to convey an estate, because what is requisite to be done for conveying it is perfectly well known, and the Court can judge whether the party ordered to convey does or does not do the requisite things. But if Mademoiselle Wagner had been ordered to sing, and she sang a little flat or a little sharp, or a little too fast or a little too slow for the band, or made a few mistakes, or introduced very ill-placed roulades, &c., so that, in effect, her singing would be very unsatisfactory, how could the Court ascertain—on what possible evidence could it ground a conclusion that she had or had not disobeyed the order? So, in the cases in which the Court has said it cannot order a performer to act; the reason is, because the acting is not a measurable thing, of the complete doing or not doing which the Court can form an opinion, and therefore it will not stultify itself by making an order which might be in practice laughed at. But no such difficulty occurs in enforcing a contract—say to build a house or a bridge, according to a given specification. Perfectly satisfactory evidence could be given on such a matter to enable the Court to say whether the thing agreed to be done had been done, and it could therefore just as well enforce its order as it can an injunction, strictly and properly so called.

Next, as to the deficiency of power in the Court of Chancery to give damages. Why it should be oppressed by that infirmity it is difficult to conceive, but so it is. The Court did indeed once attempt it in Denton v. Stewart, (see 17 Ves. 276, notes), and that was followed in Greenaway v. Adams, (12 Ves. 395). But those cases were substantially overruled by Todd v. Gee, (17 Ves. 273), and have never since been treated as of any authority. So that now one has but to satisfy an equity judge that what is asked is damages, or even, as it is termed, sounds in damages, and he is forthwith seized with an equitable horror, which results in the peremptory refusal of the relief asked. Now, the way this works is simply to put the parties to expense, and nothing more. A plaintiff files his bill for specific performance; it turns out that he cannot have it, either from his own conduct or that of the defendant; because, for instance, he has not so conducted his part of the transaction as to come up to that degree of equity which is required by the Court before it will give what it considers a special aid—a sort of indulgence; or because, perhaps, the defendant has put it out of his own power to perform the contract. In the former case the plaintiff may deserve damages; in the latter he must be deserving of them. But in either case all the Court of equity can do is to dismiss the bill, with or without costs. Then the plaintiff, having, if his bill is dismissed with costs, paid very heavily—if without costs, still heavily, for his mistake in coming to the wrong jurisdiction, goes to the right one, and then obtains damages. Now, why this circuitry should prevail—for what good reason the Court of equity should not in such a case ascertain what is the damage suffered by the plaintiff, and give him what he is fairly entitled to in respect of such damage, nobody can say, except that it has always been so; and we say, the sooner it ceases to be so, the better for the public. Of course, upon the suggestion of such an alteration, as upon the suggestion of every departure from existing practice, objections would be raised.

It will probably be asked, how, by what machinery, is a Court of equity to assess damages? We answer, how does a jury do it? It hears the proof of the facts on which damage is established: it hears evidence to shew the amount of the injury; to shew the merits or demerits of the claimant; to shew everything, in fact, on which a man of common sense comes to the conclusion that the plaintiff has suffered wrong—that his wrong is represented by a given amount of money, and that, if he gets that money, he can no longer complain. Are, then, equity judges denuded of the faculties requisite to go through so simple a process? Are they less able, than the respectable individuals who compose a jury, to understand evidence, and to draw from it a common sense, business-like conclusion? The argument is really too trivial to require for its refutation more than to be stated. The machinery, which is adequate for taking the most intricate accounts, is surely sufficient to ascertain whether any and what damage has been suffered by any party to a suit, by his opponent not having done something that he ought to have done—that is, in any case in which a jury or anybody else could ascertain the damage.

We will conclude by noticing a defect which is rather of the present structure of the Court than in its principles or procedure. We refer to the constitution of the Court of Appeal. The Court of Appeal in Chancery is a sort of dissolving view: sometimes it presents itself as two judges; anon that vanishes, and three appear; then that dissolves itself, and one only is seen. It is not of right that the suitor is heard on appeal by three judges, or even by two. To have three is an indulgence for which he must shew a special ground; and though two habitually do hear appeals, that is not at all of necessity. Now, this results simply from the habitual parsimony of the Legislature in relation to anything that has a useful purpose. The Legislature thought it had done a great thing in adding the two Lords Justices to the strength of the judicial staff in Chancery, and would not go a step further, although it was pointed out at the time, in and out of the House, that two is about the most inconvenient number that could be selected for an appeal court, for many reasons—one, of itself almost enough, being, that whenever the two judges differ, as in the ordinary course of human events they must not only sometimes, but not unfrequently, there is practically no decision; another reason being, that as no two men are ever found exactly equal intellectually, there is the greatest probability, that when there are two judges, one will habitually more or less influence the other—not intentionally of course, but in fact. The reason why two, and no more, was the number selected, is obvious. It was necessary to have something more than one judge as a permanent Court of Appeal; and to save the expense of even a single judge's salary was no slight object with the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain: therefore the Court was composed of two, and no more. That that number is not satisfactory is proved, however, by the continual struggle made by suitors to obtain the presence of the full Court; not a day passes without some application to have a case heard by the full Court, all sorts of pretexts being put forward for this special indulgence—all in general equally flimsy; the real and only ground being, that the suitors feel (or their advisers feel for them, which is the same thing) that a Court composed of three or four judges (and they would prefer four generally to three) is better than a Court composed of two; and they point, and with reason, to the Courts of law, to the Privy Council, and to the House of Lords, as examples of the prevalence in practice, everywhere but in the Court of Chancery, of a Court of Appeal being composed habitually of more than two persons. Thus, we contend, ought the Court of Appeal in Chancery to be constituted—it ought to have at least three, it would be better with four judges; whether they should be all permanent judges, or whether the third and fourth should be drafted for appeals from the other branches of the Court, according to the practice followed in composing the Exchequer Chamber, is a question of detail, with which we do not attempt here to meddle. But on the broad proposition we entertain no doubt, that no appeal should ever be heard by less than three judges.

THE COUNTY COURTS.

SIR,—Towards the close of last year* I was gratified by your powerful and just remarks on certain evils and abuses which, as you say, have either crept into or were originally incident to county courts. Your able and bold exposition of those evils led me to hope that you would propose some efficient remedy. Perhaps the following imperfect suggestions may stimulate you to do so.

I think, in the first place, that your enumeration of evils is not complete, and probably it was not intended to be so. I may mention a few omissions, without pretending to exhaust the list. You concede to the county courts the merits of convenience, cheapness, and expedition. The convenience of the county court procedure is not always apparent. Take a single instance —the mode to which the plaintiff is usually limited of reaping the fruit of his judgment. What can be more annoying than the ordinary practice respecting the paying in and getting out of a debt ordered to be paid by instalments? But the principle of ordering payment by instalments at all is grossly absurd and unjust. It is the first duty of the State in matters civil to enforce, as perfectly as may be, the prompt and exact performance of every contract for valuable consideration, which was not immoral or otherwise objectionable on the ground of policy, or unreasonable to a degree implying fraud on the other side at the time of making it. When, by the tests provided by the bankruptcy and insolvency laws, it is ascertained, or believed to be ascertained, that a man is really unable to fulfil all his pecuniary engagements, provision is made for applying his means as far as they will go, and then for discharging him, either absolutely or conditionally, from further liability. Whether this branch of our law is not too lax in favour of debtors I need not now inquire; but I take it to be clear, that when, independently of the bankrupt or insolvent law, a court of justice says to a creditor, after the time agreed for full payment of the debt has passed, "You shall take payment only by so many weekly or monthly instalments," it varies the contract between the parties, either wantonly, or on an assumption of reasons, the existence and cogency of which are never ascertained, and are in fact unascertainable.

We are indebted to the sentimentalists for this sample of paternal government. If the judge is soft-headed, (and therefore supposed to be soft-hearted), the defendant asks for time as a matter of course, and obtains it as a matter of course, unless the judge has some private prejudice or grudge against him, (and experience proves that many of these grandees are much infested by Mordecais). If the judge inquires, he elicits at most an assertion on one side, (usually denied on the other), that the defendant is poor and unable to pay at once, and there the inquiry necessarily ends, the real ability of the defendant being left as doubtful as if the question had never been asked, while the possibly greater need of the plaintiff is regarded as wholly irrelevant. The result is, that in the majority of cases the county court, which is represented to be a court for the convenient and expeditious recovery of debts, acts as a court for the granting of protection to fraudulent debtors, its judgment for deferred payment amounting to protection in the meantime, sufficient to enable the debtor to decamp with his goods, or make them over to some accommodating relation or friend; for the county court, in exercising this kind of bankruptcy jurisdiction, omits the precaution of laying hands on the debtor's assets. If this form of relief is good for the small vulgar debtor, it should be equally good for the genteel one, who, in mental and corporal suffering, often feels a pang as great as when a smith is sued. Indeed, the jurisdiction seems more peculiarly suitable to that class of debtors who are accustomed to cover destitution with a varnish of gentility. I believe that the scamps form a much larger proportion of the defendants in the county courts than they do in the superior courts, because in the lower ranks of life the real circumstances and characters of debtors are less disguised, and consequently it more frequently happens that a creditor feels assured both that his debtor is unable to pay at once, and that he needs no judicial process to compel him to pay as soon as he can. But however that may be, it is an act of improvidence to contract debts without the means or prospect of paying them at the stipulated time; and to release or vary such contracts is, pro tanto, to levy an impolitic as well as an unjust poor-rate on creditors.

What I have said in qualification of your praise of the convenience of these tribunals will also tell against the attribute of expedition. I believe it is well known that they are not always exemplary on the score of cheapness; but I will pass that, and come to the important question of their efficiency. And, first, of the flagrant cases of prejudice and corruption which must have occurred to the observation of all who have had much experience in a variety of the courts. I do not at present refer to any case of pecuniary corruption, but to cases of prandial, choreal, comital, ecclesiastical, and such like interests or predilections. That the "spes cœnatica" often suffices to disturb the balance of justice in the hands of a man supposed to possess an educated soul, (not to mention his income, for non constat that it is not more than effaced by his outgoings), is a sad truth, which it is of no use to ignore. Then there are the opinions which, in a country district, every man who is not a hermit forms as to the character, habits, and means of most of the people about him, including the labourers—opinions picked up for the most part in the college of Rumour. Add all those sources of prejudice suggested by Scott's story of the defeated chess-player, who ultimately enjoyed the satisfaction of checkmating his opponent by condemning him to death from the judgment-seat.

The remedy is obviously that which you suggest. No judge must administer justice in the district where he permanently resides, unless he be a notorious hermit—i.e. live in London. The judges must be itinerant over every part of the country except their own districts. Such an alteration of the system would soon lead to other amendments not unimportant. At present the few county court judges who were originally tolerably well fitted for their office, and who have not suffered much from its deteriorating influence, sustain the reputation of the body. But if the opportunity of experiencing and criticising the qualifications of every individual member of the body in succession were afforded to every district in the kingdom, the lamentable average deficiency would become notorious, and some alteration, with a view to securing better appointments and permanent efficiency, would be insisted on; and then, perhaps, would be seen the necessity of adopting a proposition which at present I expect to be met only with ridicule. The evil is this—that in every judicial qualification the county court judges are, as a body, immensely inferior to the judges of the superior courts. From causes sufficiently obvious, the best men do not seek the appointments; the best of those who would accept them are not generally selected; and the nature of the duty, like that of a police magistrate, tends to deteriorate the functionary. It is not enough to have got rid of the nuisance of jury trial. The system does not work well, and in large commercial towns this is felt by those who are most affected by it.

Nothing but extreme poverty can excuse a State from providing an equal amount of judicial efficiency for the dispatch of all its judicial business. If I lose 20*l.* by an erroneous decision, I find no consolation in reflecting, that if 60*l.* had been in question, I might have had a better judge. The question of expense in this case is no question at all; and here I would throw in the teeth of the Legislature the cost of their palace, and of its ventilation, if that missile had not been already so freely used by other projectors. Let the number of puisne judges be increased to seventy or seventy-five; let them interchange their districts at intervals of six or nine months, holding frequent sittings, according to the present county court practice, but at such sittings taking the whole of the civil business of the district, subject to regulations for the separate hearing of cases not argued by counsel; and let them in rotation sit in banco. We shall thus at once elevate the county courts, secure their judges from deterioration, raise the standard of the Bar, and greatly facilitate the trial of those civil cases which are now excluded from the county courts.

It is impossible that a judge can long retain a clear judgment in questions either of evidence, of law, or of what is called natural justice, if he is confined to petty cases, and is not kept up to the mark by an efficient Bar. It is impossible, in short, that any person can long retain his respectability in any walk of life where he is not encountered by his equals. The cock of the walk proverbially deteriorates. We are all conscious of an illiberal (but not unphilosophical) conviction that schoolmasters cannot be gentlemen, which makes us discredit the legend of Tyrtæus, and receive that of Dr. Arnold cum grano. In the business and the bar of the superior courts the judges meet their equals, and are bettered by them. T.

LONDON, MAY 6, 1854.

It is well known to our readers, that for the reasons which we have ourselves stated, and for those so ably urged by a correspondent in our last number, we are opposed to any extension of county court jurisdiction while those tribunals are deprived of salutary checks, and are subject to degrading influences. We shall on a future occasion consider the remedy proposed by our correspondent; but we are now anxious to draw attention to another of our inferior courts, dealing with interests beyond the cognisance of county courts, and yet more incompetent to deal properly with them. We allude to the jurisdiction of Sheriffs' Courts over the execution of writs of inquiry.

A sheriff is not allowed to try causes, except those which involve debts or demands not exceeding the sum of 20l.; he may not try any actions for unliquidated damages, however small the claim may be. But with this admission, that it is not expedient to intrust large interests to his judicial care, he is actually allowed to preside at the assessment of damages, amounting, it may be, to many thousands of pounds; and not only the sheriff, but the undersheriff, or the sheriff's deputy*, may be the judge on such occasions. Now, the deputy may be any one, however incompetent, however inexperienced. If it be said, that after judgment by default questions of difficulty do not arise, we utterly deny such a statement. As difficult and intricate questions arise upon the measure of damages as upon any branch of the law with which we are acquainted; it is the important part of a cause to the parties concerned, and just that part which requires the control of a clear-headed, strong-minded, just judge. Take a few instances—action for crim. con., judgment by default, damages claimed 10,000l. The defendant is not represented, and on these occasions he very often does not appear in person, or by counsel or attorney. The plaintiff's counsel makes an exaggerated, inflammatory speech, appeals to every topic of prejudice against the unhappy defendant, suggests all sorts of damage, for which there is not the slightest foundation in fact, and which legally ought to be excluded. He follows this up by putting the most leading questions to his own witnesses without objection.

* See Reg. v. The Sheffield Railway Co., 22 Q. B. & El. 194, 198, 201). Where the undersheriff presides in the town where the inquest is held, it is irregular to employ a deputy; in such case the undersheriff should execute the writ himself. (Denny v. Trapnell, 2 Wils. 224). The sheriff cannot be executed before a deputy of the undersheriff. (Reg. v. Williams, 2 Dowl. N. S., 938).

There may be points as to marriage settlements, &c., the fortune of the wife, the probable loss to the husband; the undersheriff's deputy either leaves the case entirely to the jury, as suggested by the counsel, or perhaps damages the defendant a little more, if it be possible. The jury may ask a question or two, whether the House of Lords will be more ready to grant a divorce if they give heavy damages than if they give light, and other equally irrelevant and improper questions, which, however, are often answered so as to swell the amount assessed; and thus led, prejudiced, and biased entirely to the plaintiff's side, the amount of damages given by them is in many instances enormously disproportionate to the real injury. We have no hesitation in saying, that in cases of this sort thousands are sometimes awarded where the proper amount would be as many hundreds. In other actions—trover, trespass, actions ex contractu, with special damage—equally difficult questions arise. (See Hadley and Others v. Bazendale, 18 Jur., part 1, p. 358). Then, again, it is not always easy to determine what amount of evidence should and should not be given after judgment by default*.

It is true, that under special circumstances, by leave of the court or a judge, the writ of inquiry may be executed before a judge of one of the superior courts; and the jury, by like permission, may be summoned from the special jury book; but in practice such an application is rarely made, and would be but seldom granted. The defendant who suffers judgment by default is generally without professional assistance, and therefore is not aware that he has even the chance of having his case considered before a better tribunal.

Our remarks, of course, apply also to the sheriff's jurisdiction in the assessment of compensation under the Railways and Lands Clauses Acts, when many questions of importance and difficulty have to be decided, as to taking into consideration the goodwill of a business, tenants' fixtures, improvements, the chance of a beneficial renewal of a lease, &c. (See Rea v. The Liverpool and Manchester Railway Company, 4 Ad. & El. 650; Corrigall v. The London and Blackwall Railway Company, 5 Man. & G. 219; Atk. Shff. Law, 176 et seq., 2nd ed.) On these occasions, however, both parties are generally fully represented, and therefore there is not so great an opportunity for injustice as in cases of assessment after judgment by default.

A QUESTION of some novelty and difficulty was raised in a case recently before the Lord Chancellor, on an opposition to the sealing of a patent for an invention obtained by a communication from a foreigner—viz. whether, if it be alleged or shewn that the applicant obtained the invention by fraud committed abroad, either actual or constructive, upon the inventor, the Lord Chancellor will, on behalf of the Crown, look at that circumstance in reference to granting or withholding the patent. In the case to which we refer the point did not call for adjudication, because the Court was of opinion that there was no fraud on the part of the applicant. It remains therefore still an open question, which turns upon the principle on which letters-patent for inventions are granted or refused.

When a party comes forward as himself the inventor, there can be no doubt or difficulty. If he has, in fact, instead of being himself the true inventor, stolen or otherwise fraudulently obtained his knowledge of the invention from any other British subject, it is every day's practice that his application for a patent will be refused, and on these grounds—first, that he does not support by the facts the allegation of his petition to the Crown; his petition to the Crown, and his affidavits in support of it, stating that he is the true and first inventor; so that if he is not, he deceives the Crown by a false representation, besides not being within the exception of the Statute of Monopolies, according to the construction put on that statute in reference to what constitutes the true inventor. Secondly, that he is committing a fraud on another of the Queen's subjects, who is the person really entitled to a patent, if he desires it.

But when a person applies for a patent for a foreign invention the same principles do not apply. The ground assigned in the old cases for granting letters-patent for inventions not the invention of the applicant, but communicated from foreign countries, is, that the object of the exception in the Statute of Monopolies was to encourage the introduction of new inventions within this realm, and that therefore it was immaterial whether first discovered here, or first brought here; the policy of the law was to get them for the improvement of the manufactures of this country; or, to use the quaint language of the leading case on the subject, (Edgeberry v. Stephens, 2 Salk. 446), "the statute of James speaks of new manufactures within this realm; and if they be new here, it is within the statute, which was intended to encourage new devices useful to the kingdom; and whether learned by travel or study, it is the same thing." Accordingly the importer has always been held the inventor within the meaning of the statute; but then he must apprise the Crown of the true character in which he applies. Accordingly the form of application, and of the affidavit in support of it, for a patent for an invention imported from abroad, differs from the application of an inventor: the inventor alleges, as we have observed, that he is the first or true inventor, or that he hath invented; the importer alleges that he has, "in consequence of a communication from a certain foreigner residing abroad, become possessed of an invention," &c. All that seems, therefore, necessary to support the allegation on which he is required to ground his application, is the fact of his being in possession, and by reason of a communication from a foreigner residing abroad, and nothing is said about the mode of acquisition. That, however, would leave untouched the broad question, whether the Crown of this country is intended by the statute to take notice of the equitable rights of an alien residing abroad, so as to refuse a patent to a British subject whose possession of the invention is obtained by a fraud committed on such alien in a foreign jurisdiction.

If the question were to be treated on broad considerations of universal law, we apprehend the conclusion would be, that the Crown cannot be intended to recognise fraud in any shape, and that it would be contrary to the law of nations that one State should encourage, for its own benefit, fraud committed on the subjects of another; at any rate, assuming it to be a friendly State. But the question is much narrowed by the language of the statute, and the construction put upon it by the Courts—a construction which seems to ignore entirely everything beyond the fact of importation into, and novelty in this country. The only authority of which we have any knowledge, if it can be called authority, is the case of Sir Thomas Lombe, who in 1718 obtained a patent in this country for bringing here from Sardinia the invention of certain silk machines, of which it was notorious that he had obtained his knowledge by disguising himself as a workman, and so obtaining access to the Italian manufactory, and secretly and fraudulently, as regarded the

* See The Banbury Union Guardians v. Robinson (7 Jur., part 1, p. 599) and Cooper v. Blick, (2 Q. B. 915).

Italian manufacturers, making plans and models of the machinery; yet for this importation he was afterwards rewarded by Parliament by a considerable grant of money. Now, as Parliament must have been well aware that the communication from a foreigner was in fact a fraud on that foreigner, by making a grant (which Parliament in such matters does in a quasi-judicial capacity) it recognised the claim of the importer for the importation simply, without reference to the mode in which the knowledge was obtained.

That much weight would be given to such a precedent at this day is not, however, probable; and the question, if ever it actually again arises, will have, we conceive, to be determined on principle.

The principal argument against the exercise of any jurisdiction in the matter would be, that the Crown cannot take cognisance of a fraud committed against a person not its subject, and out of its jurisdiction; that the cognisance of such fraud belongs to the foreign State and its tribunals. But, on the other hand, there are many foreign rights of which the Courts of this country take notice—at least, when the foreigner or his assignee brings them here. Besides, the question is not merely whether the Crown will notice the fraud on the foreigner, with reference to the foreigner's rights, but whether it will exercise a prerogative, exercised ex mero motu, in favour of a party guilty of a fraud in respect of the very subject of the grant which he seeks.

The question, which is not at all unlikely to arise again, is not free from great difficulty.

THE COUNTY COURTS.

SIR,—I once entertained the opinion of your correspondent "T.," (ante, p. 143), namely, that the orders for payment of debts by instalments in the county courts were objectionable. I am convinced by experience that I was in error.

First, cases have several times been removed into my courts by actions on the judgment of the superior courts, for the sole purpose that the plaintiffs might obtain the payment of their debts by instalments. Without payment by instalments, the plaintiffs had no chance of payment; for if they imprisoned their debtors, the Insolvent Court would have deprived them of the best chance of payment.

Secondly, when the defendant is not a labourer, or a poor man ordained priest, and the debt is on a bill of exchange or a promissory note, or of large amount, or the defendant is about to remove from the district, my rule is—and I believe it to be that of very many other county court judges—to order immediate payment of the whole debt and costs, unless, which often happens even in these cases, the plaintiff requests the order to be payment by instalments. But in these cases, if the party cannot pay, and comes up on a judgment summons, (the fees for which are too high), then the law governs the duty of the judge. (County Courts Act, ss. 99, 100). The order must then be made, if there be no misconduct, after an inquiry into the means and ability of the party to pay; and if he cannot pay the whole sum at once, (the plaintiff having had every opportunity to levy an execution under the original order), then it is the duty of the judge to vary the original order, and to make the debt payable by such instalments as are within the means of the defendant to pay. Why should the public be burthened with the maintenance in prison of such a debtor, and why should courts of law aid the gratification and anger of a creditor? The plaintiff gets by these means an almost certain security for the payment of his debt, and without this order he would have none.

Thirdly, tradesmen will grant improvident credit, and the labouring classes especially are willing to accept it. But what was the position of the labouring man before the county courts system permitted the payment of a debt by instalments? If he suspended his dealings, or did not pay what his creditor (not the judge) thought to be enough out of his earnings towards his debt, his home was destroyed, all his goods were sold, he was sent to prison, and the wife and children were sent to the workhouse. This is no exaggeration, and some parliamentary returns, moved for many years since by Mr. D. W. Harvey and others, shew the cruel system that then existed. I have been again and again told that the present system (though abused by some tradesmen, who think it saves the necessity of all inquiry by themselves, and justifies improvident credit) "preserves the hope of a labouring man to get out of his difficulties, and keeps his heart strong and unbroken." Moreover, the public are interested in the opinions of debtors as well as of creditors.

Fourthly, the public see what the amount of the instalment is, and how it is measured, namely, by ascertaining what the wages and sources of subsistence of the debtor are. The judge is not in these cases "soft-hearted." He knows he has the charge of a new institution, and that the favourable opinions entertained towards him are to be carried to the credit of the institution committed to him and to his supervision, and that what he does has the jury of a large community to criticise, not in one, but actually in thousands of similar recurring cases. He cannot be corruptly "soft-hearted," unless incompetent for his office, for his own mind must be governed by a tolerably unerring guide when he knows the usual price of labour in the district in which he acts. Certainly, in the far majority of cases I have heard, both debtor and creditor agree on the amount of the instalment ordered to be paid.

Fifthly, I think the fees too high, but the county courts are still by far the cheapest courts in all defended actions; and I affirm that, as respects all defended actions above 20*l.* (for the appeals test these), the system does work well.

Sixthly, as respects the "prandial, choreal, comital, and ecclesiastical predilections" of the county court judges, and "their incomes being effaced by their outgoings," surely your correspondent can only recognise some single acquaintance of his own in this terrible charge. I have certainly rarely visited in my circuit, and in its largest town I have not dined in any private house, yet in that town I have no reason whatever to complain of disrespect. As respects, also, the behaviour of parties in court, I know that the decorum of my court is never disturbed until gentlemen of the bar appear, who commence their displays by assuming they are not required to be themselves decorous.

Lastly, if a commission were issued to inquire into the mistakes of the judges of the superior courts, new trials arising out of their errors, compromises because final decisions are too expensive, references to arbitrators because the judge dislikes a long cause, and every plaintiff and defendant were invited to tell his grievances, and circulars were sent to all the attorneys of the kingdom to relate the grievances of their clients, and the results were contrasted with the results of the present inquiry respecting county courts, I have no doubt there would be an unanimous verdict that the county courts work far better than the superior courts.

A COUNTY COURT JUDGE.

RECEIPT STAMPS.

SIR,—I find it stated among notices to correspondents in a newspaper of wide circulation, that "it was some time since settled by official authority, that the receipts of money for charitable institutions require a stamp under the new Stamp Act." Understanding that by the term "receipts of money for charitable institutions" is meant receipts for voluntary contributions, it seems to me desirable that this settlement of the question should not be acquiesced in.

The words in stat. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 59, are, "receipt or discharge given for or upon the payment of any money amounting to two pounds or upwards." These are the very same words as are used in stat. 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, sched., part 1; the only difference is, that in the earlier statute there is a declaration that "any note, memorandum, or writing whatever given to any person for or upon the payment of money, whereby any sum of money, debt, or demand therein specified shall be expressed or acknowledged to have been paid, settled, balanced, or otherwise discharged or satisfied, . . . shall be deemed to be a receipt for a sum of money of equal amount with the sum, debt, or demand so expressed or acknowledged to have been paid, &c., and shall be charged with a duty accordingly." In Tomkins v. Ashby, (6 B. & Cr. 541, 542), Lord Tenterden said, "All these words import that something formerly due has been discharged;" and he held that a memorandum acknowledging that A. B. had left a sum of money in the hands of C. D. was not within the act.

This decision of Lord Tenterden shews that the duty under the earlier statute applies only to receipts for the payment of money due, which, in a legal sense, cannot be affirmed of a voluntary contribution any more than of the deposit of a sum of money. No argument in favour of the imposition of the duty can be founded on the omission of the declaration in the recent statute, which in express terms confines the duty to receipts on the payment of money; that is, of money due under a legal obligation to pay it. But the preamble of the recent statute, and sect. 2, which repeals the former stamp duties and imposes the new duty, shew that it was not intended to include instruments in respect of which stamp duty was not before payable.

For these reasons I think that the Courts would hold that a receipt for a voluntary contribution to a charitable institution is not liable to duty under stat. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 59.

LONDON, MAY 13, 1854.

It is a well-known rule of law, "qui prior est tempore potior est jure;" and Courts of equity, professing to follow the law, have adopted and acted upon it, with this qualification, viz. that where the equity of one of two claimants is better than that of the other, the legal rule shall not prevail. The various modes of enun-ciating the rule are perhaps open to some criticism; and in the recent case of Rice v. Rice, (2 Drew. 73), when its application to a very interesting and novel point was the subject of great discussion, Sir R. T.
Kindersley, V. C., said, that to lay down the rule with perfect accuracy, it should be stated in some such form as this—"As between persons having only equitable interests, if their equities are in all other respects equal, priority of time gives the better equity; or qui prior est tempore potior est jure."

The question discussed in Rice v. Rice was one which had never previously been actually decided, viz. whether an equitable mortgagee by deposit of title deeds is entitled to priority over a vendor claiming a lien, of previous date, for unpaid purchase money, when the receipt of the purchase money is acknowledged on the conveyance. The question arose in Nairne v. Prowse, (6 Ves. 752), but the case was ultimately disposed of upon another point.

A case, however, somewhat analogous came before Lord Northington, who held that a declaration of trust in favour of an incumbrancer was tantamount to an actual assignment, unless a subsequent incumbrancer, bonâ fide and without notice, procured an assignment;
and that the custody of the deeds respecting the term, with a declaration of the trust of it in favour of a second incumbrancer, was equivalent to an actual assignment, and therefore gave him an advantage over the first incumbrancer, which equity would not take from him. (Stanhope v. Lord Verney, Co. Litt. 290. b., note (1), s. 15; S. C., 2 Eden, 81).

The only difference between the case before Lord Northington, and the case of a vendor's lien with a subsequent deposit of the title deeds, appears to be, as observed by Lord St. Leonards in his book upon Vendors and Purchasers, (vol. 2, p. 881, 11th ed.), that in the former case both the trusts were declared by the parties; whereas in the latter the trust or lien is raised in equity, and not by express declaration, and the trust or equitable mortgage is generally created by the declaration of the parties; which circumstance, if it turns the scale either way, is certainly in favour of the mortgagee, who has, equally with the vendor, an equity, and does not, like the vendor, claim contrary to his own acknowledgment by his conveyance, that the money was paid, which the mortgagee no doubt gave credit for. His Lordship then adds, "that upon the authority of Nairne

hope v. Lord Verney, we may, perhaps, venture to say that an equitable mortgage by deposit of deeds to a person, bona fide and without notice, will give him a preferable equity, and will overreach the vendor's equitable lien on the estate for any part of the purchase money."

In the case of Rice v. Rice the vendor executed an assignment of leaseholds, which recited the payment of the whole purchase money, and had an indorsement of the common receipt clause; at the same time the other title deeds were delivered over to the purchaser. The whole of the purchase money was not paid, the vendor, upon the promise of the vendee to pay in a few days, allowing the payment to stand over. The day after the execution of the deed the purchaser deposited the assignment and title deeds, with a memorandum, to secure an antecedent debt, and then absconded without paying either the vendor or the equitable mortgagee. Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C., held that the equitable mortgagee was entitled to priority, upon the ground that he had the better equity. His Honor said that it appeared to him, that in all cases of contest between parties having equitable interests, the conduct of the parties, and all the circumstances, must be taken into consideration, in order to determine which had the better equity; that everything in the present case seemed in favour of the defendant, the equitable mortgagee. The vendors, when they sold the estate, chose to leave part of the purchase money unpaid, and yet executed and delivered to the purchaser a conveyance, by which they declared in the most solemn and deliberate manner, both in the body and by a receipt indorsed, that the whole purchase money had been duly paid. They might still have required that the title deeds should remain in their custody, with a memorandum, by way of equitable mortgage, as a security for the unpaid purchase money; and if they had done so, they would have been secure against any subsequent equitable incumbrance; but that they did not choose to do, and the deeds were delivered to the purchaser.

Thus they voluntarily armed the purchaser with the means of dealing with the estate as the absolute legal and equitable owner, free from every shadow of incumbrance or adverse equity. The mortgagee was guilty of no negligence, as he was justified in trusting to the security of the deposit, without the slightest obligation to go and inquire of the vendors whether they had received all the purchase money, when they had already given their solemn assurance in writing that they had received every shilling of it, and had conveyed the estate and delivered over the deeds. The defendant had omitted nothing that was necessary to constitute a complete and effectual equitable mortgage.

The case of Rice v. Rice does not conflict with Mackreth v. Symmons, (15 Ves. 329), decided by Lord Eldon, as in that case the contest lay between a person having a lien for unpaid purchase money, and a person who had subsequently obtained from the purchaser a mere contract for a mortgage, but without having any title deeds handed over to him. In that case, therefore, the equitable mortgagee had not a better equity than the person claiming the vendor's lien, who was therefore entitled to priority—in other words, adopting the rule as enunciated by the Vice-Chancellor, the equitable interests of the two claimants being in all other respects equal, priority of time gave the better equity.

THE COUNTY COURTS.

SIR,—“A County Court Judge” has answered my strictures on his order in a tone which shews that they do not touch him very nearly, and that in point of temper at least he is judicially qualified; but either he wants skill as an advocate, or his cause is indefensible. I condemned the limiting of the plaintiff to a recovery of his debt by instalments. The Judge answers—first, that sometimes a plaintiff asks for payment by instalments; secondly, that immediate payment is sometimes ordered; thirdly, that debtors should not be kept in prison at the public expense; and, fourthly, that it is hard to sell up a debtor of the labouring class. Answers Nos. 1 and 2 do not concern me: I only complained of orders for deferred payment against the plaintiff's wish. To No. 3 I reply, that any objection to imprisonment for debt generally must apply as much to imprisonment for disobeying an order for deferred payment as to any other case. But what I ask for is immediate execution against the goods. If that is granted, I have no objection to protect the person on the terms of payment by reasonable instalments. 4. I cannot see any distinction between a labouring debtor and another which should entitle the former to peculiar indulgence. On the contrary, the lower a man is before he falls, the easier is his fall. A labourer or an artisan, when overtaken by individual distress, as distinguished from a calamity affecting his class, (which an order for payment by instalments would not remedy), can always get on his feet, or it is his own fault. But however this may be, I repeat that the duty of a debtor is to pay his debt according to his contract: that it is impossible for any judge, on the hearing of a plaint, to ascertain the real circumstances, character, and expectations of the debtor; and even if the facts were ascertained, there is not one judge in twenty whose discretion in the matter of indulgence is to be trusted: that while strict justice is clearly the right of the creditor, it is possible that the hardship to him of deferring his remedy may be greater than that of enforcing it would be to the debtor; and that the right of granting indulgence resides exclusively in the creditor, who alone can know whether there is ground for it. As for vindictive creditors, one meets with them in the novels and plays of the last century, but I never heard of one in actual life. We see occasionally a martyr in the cause of public justice, who will be at some cost of time and money to punish a fraudulent debtor, but such examples are rarer than I could wish them to be.

In support of my assertion that the administration of justice in the county courts is not unfrequently biased by unworthy motives, I may appeal to the experience of your readers. Not many days ago I mentioned, in the presence of four lawyers, each of considerable experience in various county courts, a flagrant case of injustice committed by a local judge in favour of a boon companion. I mentioned neither name nor place. One of my auditors said, “That must be X.,” another said, “It is just what Y. would have done;” and a third added, “Both X. and Z. are quite capable of it.” But the hero of my tale was W.

I believe that barristers are not in the habit of treating county court judges with disrespect. If instances to the contrary occur, they only furnish reason for regretting that the average character of the county courts is not so high as to render such scenes as impossible there as they are in the superior courts.

Lastly, when I am told that the superior judges make more blunders than those of the counties, and that the more expensive litigation of important causes is due, not to the magnitude of the stake, but to the inferiority of the tribunal, (for that is the issue), I perceive that your correspondent's coolness begins to fail, and take the hint to preserve my own by closing the discussion. T.

SELECT CASES in the COURT of CHANCERY, from the Year 1724 to 1733. Second Edition, with Notes. By STEUART MACNAGHTEN, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"This is a useful volume, upon the plan of Smith's Leading Cases. A case is taken which expounds some leading principle of equity; to this Mr. Macnaghten has appended a note, in which he collects the subsequent cases that shew the application to particular circumstances of the principle determined in the leading case—in fact, the expansion of the law; its growth thenceforward down to the present time. There is no method so apt as this for acquiring a scientific knowledge of the law, and therefore we recommend every law student to peruse the volume before us with profound attention. It will help to lay a solid foundation of law in him, which will be of infinite service in his after studies and practice."—Law Times, Dec. 14, 1850.

"These are the sort of reports we wish to encourage. This volume has been very judiciously selected from heaps of rubbish—a notice not only of old cases, but of new ones, which are really useful to the Profession. LONDON, MAY 20, 1854.

An important bill now before Parliament, prepared and brought in by Mr. Headlam and Mr. Hutt, to “consolidate and amend the laws of mortmain, and the laws regulating gifts to charitable or religious purposes,” by which it is proposed to repeal the 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, (commonly known as the Mortmain Act), demands at the present moment attentive consideration. It proposes to repeal the Mortmain Act, except as to instruments executed on or before the 1st November, 1854, (sect. 1), and to enact that the exemptions from that act are not to be applicable to the present bill, (sect. 17), but that the facilities given by the Sites of Schools Acts are to be continued, (sect. 4).

By the 3rd section land may be conveyed, assigned, devised, or bequeathed to be used exclusively as a site for any church, chapel, churchyard, or parsonage-house belonging to the Established Church, or to be used exclusively as a site for any building to be devoted to purposes of religious worship, or for a burial-ground, or for a minister's house, by any sect or community, or as a school or college connected with any religious community, or as a site for any library, museum, or other building to be applied for the benefit of the public in the promotion of literature, science, or the fine arts, subject only to the following conditions, viz.—

That a copy of the conveyance, within one month after its execution, be delivered to the Charity Commissioners; or in case “the same has been left by will, then that within three months after the death of the testator, and a notice of the devise has come to any of the persons to whom the same has been devised, a copy of the devise shall be delivered to the Charity Commissioners.” (Sect. 3).

By the 5th section, where the quantity given for a site, under the 3rd section, “shall be greater than in the opinion of the Court of Chancery is requisite, or shall be greater than is actually used for the purpose,” power is given to recover in the Court of Chancery such portion of the land as is not so used, or is not so deemed requisite.

The power to give sites for the purposes mentioned in the 3rd section seems to us in every way unobjectionable, inasmuch as no partiality is shewn to any sect or community. The mode, however, of testing whether the quantity of land given for a site is excessive, viz. leaving it to be determined by the arbitrary judgment of the Court of Chancery, without any rule either with reference to the actual quantity of land, or the proportion it bears either to the value or quantity of the donor's other property, is liable to great objection, as having a tendency to lead to continued litigation, embarrassing to the judges and unsatisfactory to the public.

Power is then given to sell lands to trustees for charities, a copy of the conveyance one month after execution to be delivered to the Charity Commissioners. (Sect. 6). The alteration of the law proposed by this section seems to proceed upon the principle that the restrictions necessary in cases of voluntary gifts of land are not in general applicable where money already devoted to charity is laid out in land*.

It seems, however, to be objectionable on this ground—that in process of time it either will put, or have a tendency to put, a large extent of land in mortmain, and so take it out of circulation, the evils of which were, in our own country before the Reformation, and are in other countries at the present day, matters of notoriety.

The mode in which it is proposed that land should be conveyed to charitable purposes is similar to that in sect. 1 of stat. 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, except that instead of inrolling the deed in Chancery "a copy of it is to be delivered to the Charity Commissioners within six calendar months next after execution thereof;" and although the deed is to contain no reservation for the life of the grantor, it omits what is contained in the statute of Geo. 2, "or of any person or persons claiming under him." (Sect. 7).

It will be observed, that one important principle running all through the bill is, that the greatest publicity should be given to all trusts for charities; it therefore substitutes for enrolment in Chancery a very defective means of insuring publicity—the transmission of a copy of the enrolment to the Charity Commissioners.

Another innovation is, that land held by way of mortgage may be given to the person to whom the mortgage money is given. (Sect. 8*). Except in the above-mentioned cases, no land, or any interest therein, is to be given on charitable trusts. (Sect. 9).

Stock, money due upon mortgage, and all forms of personal estate connected with or savouring of reality, (except leasehold estates and chattel interests in land), may be given by any person during his lifetime to any charitable purpose, on the following conditions:—

The transfer, or other legal solemnity, must be complete three calendar months before the death of the donor, and notice of the amount transferred, and the purposes to which it is to be applied, must be given to the Charity Commissioners within one month after the transfer. (Sect. 10).

All forms of personal property, except the particular descriptions mentioned in the 10th section, may be given to any charitable purpose by any person during his life, subject only to the following condition, viz.—

That whenever any gift is made for the purpose of founding any new charitable institution, the trusts whereof are declared by any deed, instrument, or writing, such deed, instrument, or writing is to be deemed void from the death of the donor, and the property so given is to be held at his death to be part of his estate, unless a copy of such deed, instrument, or writing has, during his life, been deposited with the Charity Commissioners. (Sect. 11).

Specific legacies for the promotion of art may be given without restraint. (Sect. 12).

Any description of personal estate may be bequeathed to any charitable purpose, subject to the following condition:—

That the will should be duly executed and attested three months before the death of the testator, and that, within one month after the death, or the execution thereof, a notice, signed by the testator, of the amount so given, and the nature of the trust to which it is given, is to be delivered to the Charity Commissioners. (Sect. 12).

Trustees of charities must sell within a reasonable time mortgaged land to which they become absolutely entitled. (Sect. 14).

Defective execution of powers by will in favour of charities are to be no longer aided in equity. (Sect. 15). Except in the cases before provided for, no personal estate is to be given or bequeathed to a charity. (Sect. 16).

In order that the charitable or religious purposes to which any property is devoted should not be kept secret, trustees are rendered personally liable for the rents and profits, if they should wilfully omit to give the notices to the Charity Commissioners required by the act, by a suit at the instance of those who would be entitled in the absence of the trusts; or in the event of their neglect for five years, by a suit at the instance of the Attorney-General. (Sect. 18).

* It will be seen in a subsequent section that such land must be aliened within a certain number of years.

The provisions in the 18th and some of the preceding sections will go far to prevent the occurrence of such cases as that of Metairie v. Wiseman. They will prevent many a gift, extorted from persons under the influence of superstitious fears, or the weakness occasioned by approaching death, and will enable relatives of the donor either to contest a gift which they believe to have been improperly obtained, or to see that it is applied to the purposes for which it was destined.

Provisions are then made for curing the defects in the title to land heretofore bonâ fide sold, (sect. 19), or given (sects. 20, 21) for charitable purposes.

It then repeals the act for chantries collegiate. (Sect. 22).

The next section enables corporations to advance money on the security of real estate, (sect. 23), and to avail themselves of these securities by foreclosure or otherwise; but they will incur a forfeiture of the land unless they sell it within five years. (Sect. 24).

The Charity Commissioners must acknowledge the receipt of all documents forwarded to them under the above provision, and their receipt is to be evidence of delivery, (sect. 25); and they must also register the notices given to them under the act; but notices of gifts by will to charitable purposes are not to be accessible to the public during the life of the testator, nor are the same to be made accessible after his death if he shall have revoked such charitable gifts. (Sect. 26). With reference to this section we must observe, that although the bill carefully provides for the public not having access to the register of charitable gifts in some cases, it does not, except inferentially, provide for their access in cases in which it appears to be the object of the act that there should be the greatest publicity.

Lastly, the bill is not to apply to Scotland or Ireland. (Sect. 27). Upon what principle is the bill confined to England? Why should Scotland and Ireland be exempted from its operation? It is true, that the act of Geo. 2 was not extended to Scotland or Ireland; but if the present is a good measure, the fact of there not having formerly existed one of a somewhat similar character in those countries seems to be no reason why they should be deprived of its benefit now. If it be bad, why should England submit to it? Judges have occasionally said, in remarking upon the Mortmain Act, that its policy was not applicable to our colonies, or to Scotland and Ireland. That, however, seems to be an assumption far from correct; but, like many others proceeding from the Bench, because it becomes law it is yielded to, without doubt, as an authority. Why, however, the Mortmain Act, and, above all, the bill we have before been examining, should not be considered applicable, at any rate, to Ireland, where the same laws prevail, and where there are at least as many evils to be guarded against, seems difficult to say.

The principle of the bill is to prevent gifts to charitable or religious purposes being made by persons in extremis, or without due consideration; to give publicity to these gifts; and to see that by no secret or evasive administration by trustees they should be applied in a manner not contemplated by the donor. It is true, that in Scotland there is a wholesome restriction upon dispositions made to the prejudice of the heir by a person on his deathbed. That, however, is not the case in Ireland. It may, however, be said that one Christian community in Ireland is not endowed, and that every facility should be given to its priesthood to obtain endowments for their religious and charitable institutions. The same reasoning would, however, apply to the cases of various communities of Dissenters in England. The bill, however, does not seek to prevent gifts to charitable or religious purposes; it seeks only to prevent the exercise of undue influence in obtaining them; and there seems to be no reason why in Ireland opportunities should be afforded to any religious sect to obtain from the dying penitent gifts which might be represented as covering a multitude of sins; or why conventual communities should be tempted to withdraw themselves from the contemplation of celestial things by exertions to draw or retain within their precincts the wealthy widow or the youthful heiress, carefully trained and cautiously led into the regions of religious romance.

THE BAR OF CHARITABLE TRUSTS BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

In the case of The Attorney-General v. Magdalen College, Oxford, (18 Jur., part 1, p. 363), the Master of the Rolls lately decided that the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, is incapable of operation in favour of a title by possession adverse to a charitable trust, when the trust is of such a nature that it can only be enforced by information. The principle of the decision seems to go further, and to involve the proposition once asserted by Lord St. Leonards, (The Incorporated Society v. Richards, 1 Dru. & W. 258), but afterwards retracted, (The Commissioners of Charitable Donations v. Wybrants, 2 Jo. & Lat. 196), that trusts for public charities are not within the statute. The decision was made in an information on the relation of certain inhabitants respectively of the parishes of St. Olave and St. John, Horselydown, (formed out of the ancient parish of St. Olave), seeking to set aside a deed of conveyance of the 3rd March, 1790, whereby certain charity land was absolutely conveyed to the Master and Fellows of Magdalen College. It appeared that for upwards of a century before the conveyance the rents of the land had been applied for the benefit of the poor of the parish; but the origin of the trust and the title to the legal estate were not shewn. The conveyance in question was a feoffment in fee in consideration of a perpetual annuity of 15*l*. The purchasers entered into possession and levied a fine, and had continued in possession up to the time of the information. The defendants relied on the sufficiency of the consideration, the fine, and their title by possession under the Statute of Limitations. The decree declared the conveyance void, directed it to be delivered up to be cancelled, an account of the rents and profits since the filing of the information, and the land (which was covered by buildings extending to other land) to be marked out by metes and bounds. The question as to the defendants' right to an inquiry as to improvements was left open. The information asked for a reconveyance; but the Master of the Rolls said, "As respects the reconveyance of the property, I expressed my opinion at the hearing, that the declaration of the Court, declaring the deed to be void, and delivering it up to be cancelled, would revert the estate. I expressed my opinion to that effect in the case of Hoghton v. Hoghton, (17 Jur., part 1, p. 99; 15 Beav. 321), that where a deed was marked 'cancelled' by the Court, the parties were put in exactly the same position as if such deed had never been executed." In this respect the decree seems to have been erroneous. A decree, declaring a conveyance of the legal estate to be void on equitable grounds, and the subsequent cancellation of the deed, cannot revert the legal estate, though it may entitle any party claiming the benefit of the decree to an injunction to restrain the setting up of the legal estate. The case is different where the deed is declared void on such grounds of fraud as would invalidate it at law, and the Court is merely exercising that jurisdiction which it has concurrently with Courts of law. Here the conveyance was declared void in equity as being a breach of trust. If the conveyance had been void at law, the question as to improvements could not have arisen. But granting that the decree could defeat the legal operation of the deed by relation, that, under the circumstances, would not have afforded the desired relief to the charity, for the defendants had a clear and admitted legal title by adverse possession, independently of any conveyance; and the information sought relief against that title, on the ground of the charitable trust. That relief, beyond the account of the rents and profits, seems to have been denied them.

The most interesting question in the case was, however, that which arose on the plea of the Statute of Limitations. It was admitted that at law the defendants had a good title, either under the conveyance and fine, or under the Statute of Limitations. As to the bar of the remedy under the trust, the enactments in point are the 24th and 25th sections of stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27. Sect. 24 enacts generally, that "no person claiming any land or rent in equity shall bring any suit to recover the same, but within the period during which" he might have recovered at law, if his title had been legal; but by sect. 25, "when any land or rent shall be vested in a trustee upon any express trust, the right of the cestui que trust or any person claiming through him, to bring a suit against the trustee or any person claiming through him, to recover such land or rent, shall be deemed to have first accrued, according to the meaning of this act, at and not before the time at which such land or rent shall have been conveyed to a purchaser for a valuable consideration, and shall then be deemed to have accrued only as against such purchaser and any person claiming through him." The operation of this provision seems perfectly clear. It prevents time from operating as a bar to equitable claims under an express trust against the trustee, or those deriving title from him other than purchasers for value—i. e. purchasers for value with notice; for the want of notice would be a defence independently of the statute. "Any person claiming under the trustee" must mean, in all cases where the defendant relies on the legal estate, a person deriving the legal estate from the trustee. But if the defendant has been let into possession by the trustee without a valid conveyance, so that the trustee can at any moment eject him, then, as both his legal and (by the hypothesis) his equitable titles are invalid, he cannot, either while his possession is ripening into a legal title under the statute, or afterwards, be said to claim under the trustee; and the 25th section is not applicable in letter or in spirit, and possession adverse to the cestui que trust may be relied on. (See The Attorney-General v. Flint, 4 Hare, 149, where the true grounds of the decision are not perhaps very clearly expressed). In a suit against the trustee and a third person who alleges a title through the trustee, lapse of time is no defence under the statute to the trustee, and no defence to his co-defendant, unless he makes out his title as purchaser for value at the commencement of the enjoyment on which he relies. But if he makes out a title, not through the trustee, but adverse to him as well as to the cestui que trust, as by adverse possession during twenty years, and also shews possession adverse to the cestui que trust, then he does not come within the terms of the 25th section, for his defence is that of a legal title, which was never bound by the trust. This, if we may venture to differ from the very able and learned judge who decided the case, appears to have been the position of the defendants in The Attorney-General v. Magdalen College, on the assumption (which seems to us the proper one) that the conveyance of 1790 was inoperative at law. They had a legal title by adverse possession, which was not bound by the trust. If, on the other hand, the conveyance was operative at law, the remedy of the cestui que trust was barred, because the college, being purchasers for value, were entitled, under the 25th section, to the benefit of the statute, assuming that it was capable of operating against such cestui que trust.

This conclusion would have been allowed by the Master of the Rolls if the trust had been of a private nature; but the Court held that the trust in question did not come within the statute at all, because the information was not "a suit by a person claiming the land in equity," or rather, as the Court put it, because "there had not existed any person or class of persons, other than the Attorney-General, who, since the date of the conveyance in 1790, could by themselves individually have instituted any proceedings for the purpose of redressing the wrong which had been inflicted on these parishes by the alienation of the property;" and because, "where no such person or class of persons existed, the stat. 3 & 4 Will. c. 27, does not bar a suit by the Attorney-General, whether ex officio, or at the relation of others, to redress the injury." The condition in the second proposition implies, that though an information is not a suit within the statute, the remedy by information would be barred by the effect of the statute in cases of charitable trusts enforceable directly at the suit of objects of the charity, without the intervention of the Attorney-General; and if trusts for public charities are within the act at all, this appears to be a logical deduction from the 34th section, which bars the right as well as the remedy; so that an information, though not (according to the doctrine of the Master of the Rolls) a remedy within the scope of the act, must fail if it is founded on a right originally enforceable by means of a remedy within the act, which right is extinguished by the bar of that remedy.

In support of the conclusion that the trust was not within the statute, the Court relied, first, on the rule existing prior to the statute, that time is no bar to a charitable trust; secondly, on the omission of any express reference to charitable trusts in the statute; and, thirdly, on the inapplicability of the expressions used in the statute to the case of an information. The 24th section limits the time within which any "person claiming any land or rent in equity" may bring any suit to recover the same. The word "person" is by the interpretation clause extended to a corporation, and to a class of persons as well as to an individual. After referring to the doctrine of Lord St. Leonards in The Attorney-General v. Perse, (2 Dru. & W. 67), that time does not begin to run against a cestui que trust until there is some person in existence who is entitled to claim*, his Honor said, "For the defendants it was urged that the following persons were in existence from the date of the conveyance until the filing of the information, any one of whom was entitled to claim, and might have instituted a suit for the recovery of this land, namely, the Attorney-General, the churchwardens and overseers of those parishes, and the inhabitants of both parishes, or any one of them. With respect to the Attorney-General, he does not appear to me to be such a person as is contemplated by the statute." The words in the statute mean a person who has some beneficial estate, interest, or right in the land. The Attorney-General is not the cestui que trust, nor does he claim through any cestui que trust; he sues as representing the Sovereign—the parens patriæ. The relators are no parties to the cause—they are mere sureties for costs. His Honor then proceeded to shew that a suit by the churchwardens and overseers and the rector, if maintainable at all, would not have been a suit within the meaning of the 24th section; and that there was no authority or principle to shew that a suit could have been maintained by some of the poor inhabitants on the part of the parish, suing on behalf of themselves and the rest of the inhabitants. "In the case of a breach of trust affecting many persons, but properly of a public character, the Attorney-General, I apprehend, can alone sue with propriety." We do not propose to discuss this proposition; but assuming it to be sound, it must be admitted that the decision is not at variance with the language of the act. A charity information is a suit, being a bill of information, just as an ordinary bill is a bill of complaint or petition—it is a suit to recover the charity property—but it is not a suit by any person who literally claims the property, either beneficially or as trustee; or if it is said that the Crown, though it claims no beneficial interest in charity property, and no legal estate as trustee, yet claims, as parens patriæ, the dominion over it for the purpose of enforcing performance of the trusts, the answer is, that the Crown is not named in, and therefore not bound by, the Statute of Limitations.

* In The Attorney-General v. Perse, a testator, having devised the lands of Ballinruane to R. P. for life, remainder to B. P. in tail, gave to his executor 50*l.* to build a school on the lands of Merton, in Galway, and charged the devised lands with a yearly rent-charge of 25*l.*, to be paid thereout, as a salary to a schoolmaster for the said school, which schoolmaster should be in the nomination of the person for the time being in possession of the estates in Galway, (apparently different estates from those charged with the rent-charge), with a power to the schoolmaster to enter and distrain for arrears. More than twenty years having elapsed, and no school having been built or schoolmaster appointed, it was held that the statute was no defence to an information seeking, among other things, an account of the rent-charge, because (assuming that charities were within the statute) the time could not begin to run until there was a person to claim the benefit of the trust. It will be observed that the rent-charge was in terms legal, but it was necessarily void at law for want of a defined donee. It was held good in equity as a trust. If a trust, it was an express trust, and so protected by the 25th section. But the better view (see 2 Jo. & Lat. 191, 197; Petre v. Petre, 1

If it is said that this is a narrow construction, and that the objects of the charity are substantially parties to the suit, which is brought for their benefit, and that in other cases the equity of the statute has been applied to cases not within its letter—as where it was held that the statute was a good defence to a claim by a defendant, although he could not be said to have brought the suit—the answer is, first, that the case of a defendant falls within the letter of the 34th section, which extinguishes the right as well as the remedy; and, secondly, that the case of a charity is not analogous to any case expressly provided for. A charity is, in effect, a legal perpetuity. Every object of the charity, as he comes into existence, has an original claim under the trust, not in any way derived through other prior or existing objects; he has a new right, and there is no bar under the statute analogous to the defeating of such a right by anticipation. Even in the case of creditors, who are expressly included as a class in the scope of the word "person," the time does not begin to run against an individual debt, payable on a contingency or in future, until the time for payment has arrived. That the Legislature has omitted to provide a bar in the case of charities may be strange and inconvenient; but the Court of Chancery is justified by the authorities in not extending the statute by analogy to charitable trusts. And here a consideration occurs adverse to the suggestion, that if there had been a direct remedy for a cestui que trust the statute would have operated. Suppose that in The Attorney-General v. Perse a schoolmaster had been appointed, and (to avoid the question in Grant v. Ellis, 9 M. & W. 113) that the trust had been of a house of residence instead of an annuity, the schoolmaster, omitting for twenty years, whether by collusion or by neglect, to recover possession, would clearly have been barred for the term of his appointment; and during that term an information could scarcely have been maintainable, or, if maintainable, would probably not be instituted. To allow the statute to operate as a bar in such a case would be objectionable; and generally it may be said, that the case of a charity is much more like that of a benefice than that of an ordinary holding, and should be regulated by analogous rules of limitation. LONDON, MAY 27, 1854.

Drew. 395) seems to be, that a charge on property in the hands of the beneficial donee does not constitute an express trust within the 25th section, but is left to the general operation of the 24th section. In that view the decision of The Attorney-General v. Perse appears to stand on the same ground as that in The Attorney-General v. Magdalen College.

THE Court of Common Pleas recently considered the question, whether the twenty miles mentioned in the concurrent clause of the County Courts Act, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 128, are to be measured in a direct line—that is, in common parlance, "as the crow flies"—or according to the means of access from one place to the other. (Stokes v. Grissell, C. P., 10th May). They did not expressly decide the point, nor was it necessary for them to do so in the case before them; but Jervis, C. J., and Maule, J., appeared to be of opinion that the measurement should be by taking a straight line from place to place. The words in the section in question are merely these—"where the plaintiff dwells more than twenty miles from the defendant"—no mode of measurement being pointed out. But we submit that there are several grounds why the measurement should be by the nearest accessible route from house to house, rather than by a direct line.

The reason why a party is permitted to sue (without loss of costs) in the superior courts, when he dwells more than twenty miles from the defendant, appears to be, that the plaintiff should not be compelled to go beyond that distance to attend the court within the jurisdiction of which the defendant dwells; and if so, the means of going and returning, without committing a trespass, would appear to afford the true criterion of measurement. Again: the plaintiff would know, or might easily ascertain, the distance between himself and the defendant by the public way, but could not learn the distance by a direct line, without committing a trespass. The Court cited with approval the dictum of Parke, J., (now Parke, B.), in Leigh v. Hind, (9 B. & Cr. 774). There the assignor of a lease of a public-house had covenanted not to keep another public-house within the distance of half-a-mile. The question had been referred to arbitration, and the arbitrator had found that the house kept by the assignor was within half-a-mile by the shortest way of access, partly by footpath and partly by carriage-way. It was contended that he should have taken the distance by footpath all the way, but the Court held that the award was right. Parke, J., however, went further, and said, "I should have thought that the proper mode of admeasuring the distance would be to take a straight line from house to house. . . . The defendant agrees not to keep a public-house within the distance of half-a-mile: the plain and ordinary sense of these words is the actual distance, and I think they ought to be so understood, unless we can collect from the context that they were meant to be used in a different sense; and here the context raises no such inference. . . . It seems to me, therefore, that the distance should have been ascertained without any reference to the modes of communication. . . . But assuming that this is not the true mode of construing the agreement, I think that is to be considered the nearest way of access which a person, making the best of his way from house to house, would be likely to take." Parke, B., afterwards, (Atkyns v. Kinnier, 4 Exch. 782), adverting to this case, said, "The rule laid down in Leigh v. Hind is, that where there is a stipulation as to non-residence within a prescribed distance, the true principle of admeasurement is to take the nearest mode of access, according to the existing state of the streets." Accordingly, where a surgeon covenanted that he would not reside within the distance of two miles and a half from another surgeon, the Court held, that the distance was to be measured, not by the most frequented public ways, but by any of the usual public ways. (Atkyns v. Kinnier, 4 Exch. 782).

In these cases, with reference to the object of the contract, the nearest accessible route was taken, as the parties looked to the possibility of persons going from one house to another; and though the distance in the County Courts Act is not fixed with any view of the plaintiff going to the defendant's house, yet it is, we apprehend, with a view to his going to the court within the jurisdiction of which the defendant dwells. It is true, that where no such considerations apply, and there is nothing in the context tending to define the mode of measurement, the distance "as the crow flies" is the one adopted. Thus stat. 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 68, enacts, that no person shall retain a settlement gained by possessing an estate in a parish for a longer time than he shall inhabit "within ten miles thereof." These words were held to mean ten miles measured in a direct line from the residence to the nearest point in the parish. (Reg. v. Saffron Walden, 9 Q. B. 76). Lord Denman said—"Here we are left very much at large, and without materials for judgment. We find no words referring to any particular object; we have, therefore, to lay down a fixed and absolute rule. Now, abstractedly, the most reasonable rule appears to be that approved of by my Brother Parke, namely, a measurement by a direct line. By this we shall avoid the practical difficulty of a settlement being good one day and bad the next." The principle of this decision can be easily understood, as it would be a great hardship to deprive a man of a settlement by reason of a road being stopped up, or the like. The nearest point of the parish also might not be accessible by any public route. No question of access, in fact, would arise in the case. To the argument of counsel, that a direct line could often not be measured without committing a trespass, Williams, J., answered, "We are in no danger here of suggesting an act of trespass, for we have the distance actually found."

Sometimes statutes expressly direct this mode of measurement. Thus stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18, s. 76, reciting that doubts had arisen as to the measurement of the distance of seven statute miles prescribed by the Reform Act for the residence of voters for cities and boroughs, enacts that the distance shall be measured in a straight line on the horizontal plane from the point within any city, &c. Sometimes other modes of measurement are directed. Thus stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, which prohibits (with some exceptions) the holding of two benefices not within ten statute miles from each other, directs the distance to be computed from church to church, "by the nearest road or footpath, or by an accustomed ferry."

The question of the right measurement of distance is certainly not free from difficulty; but we would suggest as a rule, which may be deduced from the cases or statutes upon the subject, that where access or passing along the distance has been contemplated, or where it is essential to a person's rights that he should himself possess the means of measurement, the nearest accessible public route should be taken; in other cases, where no such considerations arise, the direct line should be adopted as the one least liable to change.

THE NEW MORTMAIN BILL*.

THE expediency of establishing a board of legislative draftsmen, for the purpose of revising, if not of drawing, all bills, has been long felt and urged; and since the business or profession of a law reformer has been taken up (we are afraid seldom for its own sake) by so many members of the Bar, from the Solicitor-General downwards, the measure has become one of absolute necessity: for it is certain that the desire, or the profession of a desire, to amend the law is seldom co-existent with the ability to do it, even when the reformer is a practising lawyer. Few lawyers have succeeded in their amateur attempts at draftsmanship, their performances being generally inferior to the Government bills, even as they were before the existing arrangement at the Home Office. Not to cite the shortcomings of a Preston, a Romilly, and a Sugden, we may refer to Mr. Headlam's own work, the Trustees Act, 1850, which, if parental tenderness had not blinded him, might have served as a warning against the present attempt. The faults of the Mortmain Bill are still more glaring.

The 1st section enacts, that the act of 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, "shall continue in its present form and effect with respect to all wills, deeds, or legal instruments of all descriptions duly made or executed on or before the 1st November, 1854, and that, subject as aforesaid, and subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, the said recited act shall be and the same is hereby repealed." That act, it will be remembered, enacts, that no lands or hereditaments, nor any money, stock, or other personal estate to be laid out in the purchase of any lands or hereditaments, shall be conveyed or settled for any charitable uses, unless such conveyance, &c. (other than of stocks in the funds) be made by deed, indented &c., and such stocks be transferred &c., as therein mentioned; and further, that all gifts, grants, conveyances, appointments, assurances, transfers, and settlements of any real or personal estate for any charitable use, made in any other manner or form than as directed by the act, shall be absolutely and to all intents and purposes null and void. What, then, does the bill mean by "legal instruments duly executed?" Does it mean instruments legally capable of operating according to the purport of them, and duly executed for the purpose of carrying the expressed intention into effect—that is to say, for example, conveyances to charitable uses by indenture, attested by two witnesses, and inrolled within six months? Or does it mean instruments which, if the act of Geo. 2 were out of the way, would be duly executed for the purposes expressed in them? The second is probably the meaning, but it is not expressed; and if the second is the meaning, how does the provision operate in the case of a deed purporting to be an appointment to the use of trustees for a charity, executed for a valuable consideration, but not duly executed as an appointment? Is such a deed an instrument "duly executed?" within the meaning of this clause? No doubt, if the bill were suffered to pass, the Courts would strive to twist its nonsense into something like sense, and might possibly succeed; but is this the way to deal with the laws of a civilised country, or indeed of any country?

The 2nd section contains interpretations which stand in great need of explanation. "The word 'lands' shall extend to and include manors, messuages, tenements, and hereditaments, corporeal and incorporeal, of every tenure or description, whatever may be the estate or interest therein." It includes, therefore, a personal perpetual annuity limited to the heirs. (Co. Litt. 20, 144. b.; 2 Ves. sen. 179). "The word 'seised' shall be applicable to any vested estate for life or of a greater description, and shall extend to estates at law and in equity, in possession or in futurity, in any lands." The word "possessed" is to be applicable to vested estates less than life estates; and the word "entitled" is to be applicable to contingent rights and estates. There is another definition to which we shall presently refer; but let us first see how these words "seised" and "entitled" are used in the subsequent enactments.

By sect. 3, "any person seised, possessed of, or entitled to any land may convey" &c., the same to be used exclusively as a site for any church, &c. By sect. 7, "any person seised, possessed of, or entitled to any land may convey or assign the same" upon any charitable trusts, subject to certain conditions. This power, by the definition, is given to tenants for life or years, and it is given over the land—that is to say, by the definition, (sect. 2), over the manor, messuage, tenement, or hereditament itself, and not merely the estate of the grantor therein! Of course the judges could not allow the act to have such an outrageous operation; but what are we to say of an act which requires its own interpretation clause to be set aside? We cannot imagine how such a blunder was committed; but we can mention a very elementary rule, known to all but amateur draftsmen, the observance of which would have effectually prevented it, and that is, to express a restrictive enactment in restrictive, and not in permissive, terms. The old Mortmain Act restrained a pre-existing right of alienation. The new act is to take its place, and the obvious and logical course is, to repeal the old act, and to enact in lieu of it such restrictions as were intended. If, after repealing all that is to be repealed, it is found necessary to confer a power, the power must be given in permissive terms, as where a tenant for life is to be enabled to convey the fee; but when our business is exclusively to tell the people what they may not do, common sense and the ordinary forms of language lead us to negative expressions. The consequence of not pursuing the plain course is, that additional clauses are required to express the pith and substance of the act. After many wordy clauses, telling what may be done in the way of charitable disposition, we come to two, (sects. 9 and 16), enacting, (the one as to real and the other as to personal estate), "that, except in the cases and under the circumstances before expressly provided for, it shall not be lawful for any person to" devote any property to charitable uses. This ignorance on the part of the draftsman of the use of language has led to some ludicrous results. For example, the 12th section authorises Mr. Headlam, or any one else, to bequeath any picture in the National Gallery, or any statue in the British Museum, to the mayor and burgesses of Gravesend—"It shall be lawful for any person, without restraint or condition, to bequeath by will any picture, book, statue, or other specific object useful for purposes of education, or calculated to promote the study or taste for literature, science, or the fine arts, to any university or college, or to any municipal corporation or other public body, or the British Museum." &c. No doubt the judges would put a curb upon these words too. But while they are before us, let us ask what "specific objects" are within their scope? At Marlborough House we have seen gold and silver plate, bracelets, and costly jewels exhibited for the purpose of promoting the study of or taste for the fine arts; and the newest work may be as useful for this purpose as the oldest. A modern waterpot from Lahore is an object of art—why not a fiddle-pattern spoon from Cornhill? Is the Court to sit in judgment on the æsthetic merits of the chattel? If not, what room for evasions! Again: is each testator limited to one single object? If so, how is this exclusion of cabinets of natural history, historical collections, libraries, manuscripts, reconciled with the spirit of the clause?

To return to the definitions. "The word 'stock' shall mean any fund, annuity, or security transferable in books kept by any company established or to be established, or transferable by deed alone, or by deed accompanied by other formalities, and any share or interest therein." A mortgage may be a security transferable by deed alone, though some mortgages may be transferred without deed, but cannot be transferred without writing. Are any, and what, mortgages included? Some negotiable securities are transferable by writing only, but are not transferable by deed. On what principle are they excluded? The explanation is, that the draftsman had no principle or thought in his head when he wrote down this definition, but copied it, for want of thought, verbatim from Mr. Headlam's Trustee Act, 1850, where it supplies the place of a much more accurately expressed definition contained in the act which that act superseded. The distinction between "stock," whatever that may mean, and other personal property, in the present bill, has no sensible object.

Sect. 3 enables any person to convey or devise land to be used exclusively as the site of a church, chapel, or burying ground, minister's residence, library, museum, or other building to be applied for the benefit of the public in the promotion of literature, science, or the fine arts; subject to the condition that a copy of the assurance be delivered to the Charity Commissioners within one month after execution, or, in case the same be left by will, a copy of the devise be delivered to the Charity Commissioners within three months after the testator's death, and notice of the devise has come to any of the persons to whom the same has been devised. There is no definition of "notice," and indeed a definition could scarcely have added to the host of questions which would be sure to arise on the word. If we had not confined ourselves to verbal criticism, we might ask here why the validity of a charitable devise is to depend on the activity or caprice of the trustee, or of one of the trustees? Would a charity or the Attorney-General have an action or any equitable remedy against a trustee neglecting to take the necessary steps to establish the devise? May not a devisee in trust disclaim or ignore the devise?

By sect. 5, whenever the quantity of land given for such a site as aforesaid shall be greater than in the opinion of the Court of Chancery is requisite, or shall be greater than is actually used for the purpose, it shall be lawful for the person, who would have been entitled to the land if it had not been so given, to recover the surplus. No limit of time. Suppose that two years elapse before any steps are taken to build on or to use the site, or suppose that at any time after use there is a discontinuance of use for six months.

The authority given by sect. 7 to make voluntary settlements of land to charitable uses is subject to several conditions, of which the fourth and fifth are, that the "conveyance or assignment be irrevocable, and be made to take effect immediately in possession, and that it contains no reservation of any estate or interest for the life of the grantor, or for any period having relation to the duration of the life of the grantor." Yet the power which is subjected to these conditions is expressly given to the owners of vested and contingent remainders.

Then as to evasion, a grantor may not reserve the enjoyment for his own life: this implies that he may do so for the life of a wife or a child, or of any other person, and that he may do so for a term of years. Again: no reservation of a life estate to the grantor is to be contained in the charitable conveyance. This does not extend to a conveyance by A. to B. for A.'s life, and in trust for A., and then a charitable settlement by A. of his reversion in fee.

Sect. 10 contains provisions respecting gifts of "stock, money due [qy. owing] on mortgage, and all forms of personal estate connected with or savouring of realty, except leasehold estates and chattel interests in land," which are subjected to certain conditions; and by the next section, gifts of "all forms of personal property, except the particular descriptions mentioned in the preceding section," are subjected to certain other conditions. What are "forms of personal property connected with or savouring of realty?" We cannot make even a wild guess at the meaning. And why are they subjected to special regulation? Even the distinction between a gift inter vivos, and a testamentary gift, is not expressed grammatically. The phrase is, "it shall be lawful for any person to give the same during his lifetime," i. e. for his life.

In the case of a bequest of personality to charitable uses, (sect. 13), the condition is imposed of a notice by the testator to the Charity Commissioners. In that of a devise of realty, as we have seen, the notice is required to be given by the devisee. The reason of the difference is not apparent.

The 13th section allows charitable bequests of "every description of personal estate." A term of 1000 years is personal estate; and the words cited above from the 10th section conclusively shew that leaseholds for years are within the operation of the 13th section. It is equally clear that that construction is contrary to the intention and policy of the act.

Some Jesuit must have helped Mr. Headlam to the substance of the 14th section:—"Whosoever any money due upon mortgage of land shall be given or bequeathed upon trust for any charity, and the trustees shall become seised or possessed of the land, free from all right of redemption therein, it shall be their duty to sell the said land, and to invest the proceeds in Government securities; and if they shall omit or neglect to sell the said land within such time as a Court of equity shall deem reasonable for the purpose, they shall be liable personally for any loss that may occur upon a subsequent sale thereof, or investment of the proceeds." Let any one imagine a Court of equity assessing the price that a piece of land might have been sold for ten years ago. But if the land rises in value, which is the very case to be provided for, the trustees have no inducement to perform their duty.

We must here pause for want of space. We should not complain of any lawyer or any lay member of Parliament taking up any branch of the law for amendment, if he would only employ a competent draftsman to express his ideas; and we should not be much surprised if a layman, after reading a few acts of Parliament, were to fancy that he could draw as good an act himself; but we do complain that a lawyer should give the sanction of his professional name to such a bill as this; and we trust, that much as the law of charitable gifts requires amendment, it will not be abandoned to the rude tinkering it is now threatened with.

ACTIONS BY MONEY LENDERS IN THE COUNTY COURTS.

THE following observations on the above subject have been submitted to the consideration of a noble and learned lord by one of the judges of the county courts:—

The stat. 2 & 3 Vict. c. 37, exempts from the operation of the Usury Laws bills of exchange and promissory notes not having more than twelve months to run, and all contracts for the loan of money above the sum of 10*l.*, loans on landed security excepted.

By stats. 17 Geo. 3, c. 30, and 48 Geo. 3, c. 88, bills and notes for less than 5*l.* are legal, if the forms prescribed by those acts respectively are duly followed.

And by the Stamp Acts, all such bills and notes under 40*s.* as may be issued without violating the provisions of the 17 Geo. 3, c. 30, and 48 Geo. 3, c. 88, are exempt from stamp duty.

The effect of all these enactments is, that a simple loan on an I O U for a sum under 40*s.* is subject to the Usury Laws; but a promissory note for the same amount, if made in proper form, is not so subject.

Money lenders, availing themselves of this state of the law, take promissory notes for sums under 40*s.* at an enormous rate of interest, and sue on these notes in the county courts.

The question is, whether the law should remain in this inconsistent state; and if not, what remedy should be adopted to meet the evil?

COSTS OF PAYING OFF A MORTGAGE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—Would you have the goodness to permit the following to appear in your Journal, for the purpose of ascertaining the correctness of the practice of charging in the under-mentioned case:—

In the town where I reside it is said to be an ancient and laudable practice, on a mortgagor desiring to pay off his mortgage debt, to be directed by the mortgagee to attend with him upon his solicitor, in whose custody the deeds have been previously deposited. On the attendance, the mortgagee's solicitor declines to part with the deeds until his charges are paid, namely, for making a list of the deeds to be signed by the mortgagor as a receipt for them, and for the attendance delivering them up.

In a recent case, where, on the expiration of the usual six months' notice of intention to pay off the mortgage, the mortgagor attended the mortgagee, at his request, at his solicitor's office, and then and there paid to the mortgagee the principal and interest, the mortgagee's solicitor demanded, before he parted with the deeds, the respective sums of 6*s.* 8*d.* for the attendance, and 7*s.* for a list of the deeds. The mortgagor objected to pay them, but they were ultimately paid by his solicitor, who was present, to obtain the deeds, and a receipt was then indorsed on the deed, and an undertaking to reconvey signed by the mortgagee, which was subsequently done, and duly paid for.

My impression was, that the charges were illegal as against the mortgagor; that if the mortgagee required assistance on receiving his principal and interest, he must pay for such assistance himself; but, on inquiry, there seems to be an opinion, that if the charges had been made out to the mortgagee, and by him paid, he could decline to part with the deeds until he was reimbursed them, and that the mortgagor could not redeem without paying them.

I assume that the mortgagee was neither obliged to sign the receipt for his principal and interest and undertaking to reconvey, nor was his solicitor obliged to attend the mortgagor's solicitor professionally without being paid; but neither of these questions arise, as the former was matter subsequent to the refusal to part with the deeds; and as to the latter, the solicitor attended only as witness.

The case of Wakefield v. Newbon (8 Jur. 735) seems decisive of the affair.

I am, Sir, yours obediently,

May 16, 1854.

A COUNTRY SOLICITOR.

COUNTY COURTS AND SUPERIOR COURT JUDGMENTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—Upon reading the letter of "A County Court Judge," (ante, p. 151), he states—"Cases have several times been removed into my courts by actions on the judgment of the superior courts, for the sole purpose that the plaintiffs might obtain the payment of their debts by instalments."

I know this practice was permitted some two or three years since, but I have recently been told at the City and other county courts, that the judges have declined to recognise plaints founded upon a judgment obtained in the superior courts, alleging as a reason that the plaintiff should have brought his action in the county court in the first instance.

As I cannot find anything in either of the three acts of Parliament affecting county courts authorising the issuing of plaints upon the judgments in question, I shall feel much obliged if "A County Court Judge," or any other gentleman, will enlighten me upon the subject, for it is a most important question, and one that should be thoroughly understood.

The 129th section of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, permits a plaintiff to have a superior court judgment for his debt, but deprives him of costs.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
J. B. H.

LONDON, JUNE 3, 1854.

A QUESTION of considerable importance arose during last term in the Court of Queen's Bench, and has, we are informed, been argued this term, under the 42nd section of the Patent-law Amendment Act, 1852, viz. the section by which power is given to Courts of law to grant injunctions and account. The question was this—whether a patentee, who, having brought an action for damages, and gone on to trial, without moving for an injunction or account, has obtained a verdict with nominal damages only, can then obtain an order for an account of the profits made by the wrongful use of the invention. The Lord Chief Justice is reported to have intimated that the question would probably turn on what would have been the practice, before the act, as to supporting a bill in equity, if the plaintiff had commenced by bringing an action, and taking a verdict for nominal damages only, and to have thrown out a doubt whether, in such a case, a bill would lie. In this doubt we most entirely concur. We are not aware of any authority on the subject; indeed, it is most unlikely there should be any, because, under the old law, the almost universal practice was, if the patentee cared for an account at all, to commence by filing a bill for an injunction and account. Then, if his title was doubtful, he was sent to law to establish it; and if he did establish it by a verdict, with nominal damages, then the Court of equity, being satisfied that he had a legal title, gave him what he had asked—the equitable relief of an injunction to prevent future infringement, and an account of what the defendant had made by the use of the invention.

It would not have been an inconsiderable argument in the days of Littleton and of Coke, that, from the circumstance of there being no instance of such a bill, it should be inferred that such a bill would not lie; but not resting much at this day on that species of argument, let us see whether, on principle, it could be supported.

The remedies sought by a bill for an injunction and account, and by an action for damages, are, in the first place, entirely dissimilar. By a bill, what the plaintiff says is this—"You have used my property; you have made profit in so doing, which you had no right to make for your own use; you are my trustee of that profit. I have a right to have it ascertained what profit you have made, and to have it paid to me; and I have a right to prevent your further use of my property." In an action the claim is—"You have used my property, and you have done me injury thereby; it is immaterial whether you have made profit or not; you have done me damage to a given amount."

It is quite consistent with the principle of the bill, that when the plaintiff has been sent to law to try his title, and has established it, he should come back into equity and have his injunction and account, and that whether he has recovered only nominal or substantial damages; for it being possible that there should be damage ultra the profit made by the use of the invention, there would be nothing in the fact of his recovering damages, to deprive him of the injunction and account, to which the result of the action shews that he had a title at the time he filed his bill. But however that might have been in a case where, after filing a bill and moving for an injunction, the patentee had recovered substantial damages—a case which we believe has never arisen, because the invariable practice was to take a verdict only with nominal damages—there could be no doubt that, the action being brought under the direction or permission of the Court of equity, and to inform it whether the plaintiff had a legal title or not, it was quite and strictly consistent with the principle of the relief asked, that, after the recovery of a verdict with nominal damages, the plaintiff should have his account.

But if, on the other hand, a patentee had proceeded at law for damages, and recovered damages, on what ground could he then come into equity? The Court of equity gives an injunction, not to punish for the past, but to restrain for the future. If a patentee files his bill, alleging that he has recovered damages for the past infringement, and not alleging threats or danger of future infringement, on what would his equity rest? The very nature of the action involves the complete satisfaction of the wrong done to the plaintiff. Damages mean compensation for the injury. They must include the profit, if any, made by the defendant, (though they may also go further), otherwise they would not be damages for the wrong done. This would be clear if the damages recovered were substantial damages. Why, then, should it differ the case that they are nominal? In either case the plaintiff has recovered either what he considered, or what the jury considered for him, compensation for the wrong; and if after that he went into equity, equity would, we apprehend, consider the past wrong as accounted for, and decline to add to, or interfere with, the decision of the jury. It would hold that the plaintiff had elected his remedy; that he preferred damages to a mere account of profits; and that having obtained them, his old equity was gone.

Then that being so, his equity for an injunction failing, his equity for an account would fail on that ground alone, even if it did not fail on the ground that he had already had compensation; for equity holds that in cases of waste—and infringement of a patent is in the nature of waste—the account is ancillary to the injunction; if there is no title to an injunction, there can be none to an account. The rationality of this doctrine we are not called upon to defend; but that it is the doctrine of equity may be seen by consulting Parrott v. Palmer, (3 My. & K. 641).

Sir John Jervis, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, has appointed the following Gentlemen to be Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women:—Robert Withington Simonds, of Winchester, in and for the city of Winchester, also in and for the county of Hampshire; Robert Frederick Welchman, of Southam, Warwickshire, in and for the county of Warwick.

THE MARRIED WOMAN'S REVERSIONARY INTERESTS BILL.

By this bill it is proposed to authorise "every married woman by deed to dispose of every future and reversionary interest, whether vested or contingent, of such married woman, or her husband in her right, as fully and effectually as she could do if she were a feme sole; and also to release and extinguish her right or equity to a settlement out of any personal estate to which she, or her husband in her right, may be entitled in possession, save and except that no such disposition, release, or extinguishment shall be valid unless the husband concur in the deed by which the same shall be effected, nor unless the deed be acknowledged by her as hereinafter directed:" the acknowledgment being that required in respect of land by the Fines and Recoveries Act, the whole of the provisions of which act, relating to dispositions of land by married women, including the provisions for dispensing with the husband's concurrence, are to be extended to dispositions under the proposed act.

This is, at the best, beginning at the wrong end of the chapter on the rights and disabilities of married women. The enabling married women to dispose of all their interests, whether vested or contingent, in real estate, was a necessary concession to the wants of society, which require that there should be as little obstruction as possible to the alienation of land. But no inconvenience to society can arise from tying up a married woman's reversionary interest in Consols, or in any other permanent fund; and the proposed bill would, without any assignable reason, other than the desire of conveyancers to break every fetter that is not specially forged by themselves, deprive many married women of an important protection against their own improvidence or their husbands' tyranny. It may be said that it may sometimes be beneficial to the wife to anticipate her reversion. Very possibly. So it may sometimes be desirable to upset any settlement. No arrangement for the future is certain to be the best possible; but unless we are prepared to abolish settlement altogether, it seems to be the wisest course to adhere to the letter of every settlement in favour at least of objects under disability, unless, as in the case of land, there is some clear reason of public policy for interfering. We repeat, that, in the majority of cases, it would be far more beneficial to the married woman to tie her hands than to loose them.

If any of the disabilities of married women are to be removed, let the first attack be made on those laws which make them the slaves of their husbands without even the slave's privilege of acquiring a peculium by their own industry, and on the law which, in the absence of settlement, gives their property to their husbands.

The bill contains no exception of property subject to a restraint on alienation; but that would be implied, as it is in the corresponding provisions of the Fines and Recoveries Act.

COUNTY COURTS AND SUPERIOR COURT JUDGMENTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—I beg leave to refer your correspondent "J. B. H." to the case of Winnor v. Dunford, (12 Ad. & El. 603; 12 Jur., part 1, p. 629), confirming the decision of the judge of the County Court of Cambridge in the previous case of Rance v. James, (12 Jur., part 1, p. 62), in which the point first arose, and was decided in favour of the right to sue in a county court on the judgment of a superior Court.

I remain, Sir,

Your obedient servant,
A CONSTANT READER.

[Our correspondent "J. B. H." was probably thinking of the converse case of an action in a superior court on the judgment of a county court, which is not allowed, as being contrary to the policy of the County Courts Act. (Berkeley v. Elderkin, 1 El. & Bl. 805; 17 Jur., part 1, p. 1153; Austin v. Mills, 9 Exch. 287; 18 Jur., part 1, p. 16).—Ed.]

Reviews.

A Manual for Articled Clerks, containing Courses of Study, as well in Common Law, Conveyancing, Equity, Bankruptcy, and Criminal Law, as in Constitutional, Roman, Civil, Ecclesiastical, Colonial, and International Laws, and Medical Jurisprudence; a Digest of all the Examination Questions, with the new General Rules, Forms of Articles of Clerkship, Notices, Affidavits, &c., and a List of the proper Stamps and Fees; being a comprehensive Guide to their successful Examination, Admission, and Practice as Attornies and Solicitors of the Superior Courts. Seventh Edition. By J. J. S. WHARTON, Esq., M. A., Oxon., Barrister at Law; Author of "The Law Lexicon," "An Exposition of the Laws relating to the Women of England," &c. 12mo. Pp. 511.

A SINGLE brick from this structure, properly considered, will give a very just idea of the whole. That which we first ran against was the following, in Mr. Wharton's Preface, p. viii:—

"From the wonderful extent of our sway, shewn by the fact that the sun never sets upon the dominions of England, for when the great luminary departs from this country, and from Gibraltar, Sierra Leone, the islands of Ascension and St. Helena, which are almost longitudinally parallel with us, it rises upon Newfoundland, continues its course over the Northern Isles, Labrador, and Canada, passes on in its path of grandeur from Lake Superior to the West India Isles, travels to the island continent of Australia, then sheds its glories upon Ceylon, and proceeds over the extensive empire of Hindustan," &c.

The few who, like ourselves, have looked into "A Treatise on Universal Jurisprudence, by John Penfold Thomas, Esq.," (2nd ed., 1829), and been dazzled by his gorgeous dedication to his "august sovereign," (George IV), in whose "auspicious sway the age of gold which early fable sketched is realised," will perceive that Mr. Wharton has betrayed the state of his morals as well as of his taste by copying Mr. Thomas's rubbish verbatim, without acknowledgment. Thomas's dedication to his fat friend is followed by a "Proöm," in which he says, "Neckar had too much reason reproachfully to describe us as 'Les Anglais sorties depuis long temps des écoles de la philosophie législative'—a sentence which Mr. Wharton also appropriates, and appends as a tag to the geographical plunder. Time was when a Thomas would have been deemed safe from literary robbery:—"cantabit vacuus." But Juvenal knew not Wharton.

For the benefit of those who may not see the full significance of the foregoing specimen, we will go a little deeper into the book. It professes to contain courses of study; what they are like may be readily guessed from an inspection of the author's index of "books cited, criticised, and recommended." The list includes Wharton's Exposition of the Laws relating to the Women of England; Wharton's Law Lexicon; Wharton's Principles and Practice of Conveyancing, (not yet published); Newland on Contracts, (published in 1806); Pope's Homer; Thomson's Seasons; Ivanhoe; The Merchant of Venice; Davy's Salmonia; and Carlyle on Chartism. While it recommends such elaborate works as Fearn's Remainers; Lewis on Perpetuity; and Marshall on Insurance, it gives no hint of the existence of Roper, Bright, M'Queen, or Bell on Husband and Wife; Phillips, Starkie, Taylor, or Best on Evidence; Jarman's or Davidson's Precedents in Conveyancing; Hayes's Introduction to Conveyancing; Hayes & Jarman's Forms of Wills; Smith's Leading Cases; Lewin or Hill on Trustees; or of the excellent elementary works on Real and Personal Property by Mr. Joshua Williams. To make amends, Mr. Wharton says, "A dictionary is very essential, and I do not hesitate to recommend my own Law Lexicon."

There is no criticism on books, and the promise in the title-page of courses of reading is a delusion. The bulk of the book is made up of compilations from the examination papers, (which we presume may be bought in a more complete form for less than 14s.), and a quantity of stuff which we do not know how to describe otherwise than by sample:—

"British law is derived from the following sources: 'history, acts of Parliament, the reports, abridgments, digests, treatises on the law of nature and of nations, treaties with foreign nations, treatises on the various branches of instituted law, magazines, and periodicals.' The numerous volumes in which these subjects are found constitute the bibliotheca legum of our country." (P. 24).

Judgments are contracts of record, and specialties are "instruments, not of record, but in writing, signed, sealed, and delivered by a party bound, to or for the benefit of the person to whom the liability is incurred. Such are deeds, and of these some are conveyances transferring the right to property, as a grant, release, feoffment, &c., and others are obligations 'charging or discharging property, as bonds.'" (P. 47). The information respecting bonds is repeated at p. 135, where we are told that "deeds which charge, discharge, or enlarge property are—bond, recognisance, defeasance on a bond."

Simple or parol contracts "are neither of record nor under seal, and it makes no difference whether they are in writing or verbal, express or implied, except that a written and express contract is easier of proof." (P. 48). No hint of the Statute of Frauds.

Collision is a mercantile transaction. (P. 51). But the whole title of mercantile transactions is a gem. "With regard to mercantile transactions, so far as they are cognisable at the common law, they may be comprised under these heads, viz. Mercantile Shipping—Bottomry and Respondentia Insurance—Contracts of Affreightment—The Conveyance of Passengers—Collision—Salvage—and Hiring of Seamen."

The period of limitation in respect of actions of ejectment is now twenty years, by virtue of the 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 1.

Elementary Information.—"Fictitious and needless averments need not now be made in pleadings. . . . Express colour and special traverses are also abolished." (P. 61).

"There are three modes of acquiring a title to realty: first, by operation of law; secondly, by purchase, as contradistinguished from law; thirdly, by law and purchase. Title by operation of law is either by descent or prescription, otherwise non-claim. Title by purchase is either by forfeiture or alienation. Title by law and purchase is by escheatage." (P. 130).

"The requisites to a deed are these—first, sufficient

'parties, and a proper subject of assurance, which should be described with adequate certainty; secondly, a legal consideration, or matter of inducement; thirdly, the deed must be written or printed' &c. (P. 131).

Useful Information concerning Covenants.—(P. 133).
"Covenants.—This is considered a very nice and important part of a deed. The subjects of a covenant are extremely various and extensive, the direct purpose being to secure the performance of the contract." Et voilà tout.

Relief against Forfeiture.—"Equity will only give relief on breaches of covenant provided the omission and consequent forfeiture are the effect of inevitable accident, and the injury and inconvenience occasioned thereby is capable of complete recompence; but when the transgression is wilful, or the compensation impracticable, equity will refuse to interfere, as in the case of a lessee not insuring pursuant to covenant, or to excuse him from the payment of rent, the premises being burnt down, for he ought to have protected himself by a special covenant. Forfeitures on bonds and covenants are also relievable in equity, on the ground that accident alone has prevented their fulfilment." (P. 177).

In the chapter on Medical Jurisprudence ("a science interesting and serviceable, it teaches us the economy of our physical machinery, and the mental and bodily imperfection of our frail nature"—Pref., p. ix) we are told that "the animal poisons are Cantharides (Spanish fly) and poisonous articles of food;" and that "narcotic" is a synonym of "excharotic" [caustic.] (P. 450).

The above extracts will enable our readers to warn their young friends against wasting their money and time on "The Articled Clerk's Manual." If we are asked what book of advice they should buy, we answer that we do not know any one of very recent date. The first edition of Mr. Warren's Introduction to Law Studies (1835) is, on the whole, the best. With all its faults it contains much sound advice, and is better adapted than any book we know to elevate the beginner's views of his profession, and excite his industry and emulation. The second edition (1845) is greatly overdone, and by no means so well fitted for its purpose as the first. Mr. Warren's selection of books is too voluminous, and now somewhat obsolete. As we do not know where a course of elementary reading, adapted to the present state of the law and its literature, is to be found, we will here give a list of the best elementary books, in the order in which they should be read:—

Stephen's Commentaries, (this is very inferior to Blackstone, but there is no good edition of Blackstone of very recent date—Blackstone, by Stewart, should be avoided); Williams's Law of Real Property; Williams's Law of Personal Property; Hayes's Introduction to Conveyancing; J. W. Smith's Compendium of Mercantile Law; Adams on the Doctrine of Equity, (an excellent work, though little known); J. W. Smith's Law of Contracts; J. W. Smith's Elementary View of the Proceedings in an Action at Law, (a new edition is promised); and Best's Principles of the Law of Evidence.

We do not recommend any books on law or equity pleading and practice. The articled clerk will find in Stephens, Smith, (action at law), and Adams, sufficient elementary information on these subjects to illustrate his office practice, and should postpone a deeper study until he has finished the course mentioned above, when probably he will find the existing systems very much changed, and will have to learn from books yet unwritten.

LONDON, JUNE 10, 1854.

THE case of Warbutter v. Warbutter, (17 Jur., part 1, p. 415), decided recently by Sir J. Stuart, V. C., demands particular notice, not so much in reference to its merits as a precedent, but because, while purporting to proceed upon well-established principles, it clearly departs from them, and throws doubt upon decisions of unquestionable authority. In that case the testator, by his will, dated the 28th June, 1846, gave all his real, leasehold, copyhold, and personal estate upon trust to sell and dispose of the leasehold and personal estate, and to invest the proceeds thereof, and to receive the rents, issues, and profits of the real estate, and by, with, and out of the proceeds arising therefrom to pay to his wife an annuity of 20*l.* for life; to pay Mary L. a legacy of 100*l.* and an annuity of 20*l.* for life; and, after other bequests and directions, the testator empowered his trustees "to demise, lease, set, let, and manage his said real estate, as also his leasehold estates, so as to produce the greatest rental." The assets of the testator were of the yearly value of 112*l.* The Vice-Chancellor held that the widow was not bound to elect between her dower and the provision made for her by the will. His Honor thought that the case of Grayson v. Deakin, (3 De G. & S. 298), decided by Sir J. L. Knight Bruce, L. J., when Vice-Chancellor, and the case of Parker v. Sowerby, (17 Jur., part 1, p. 752), decided by Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C., which had been pressed against the right of the widow, proceeded upon "a complete misapprehension" of the language of Lord St. Leonards in Hall v. Hill, (1 Dru. & W. 94), the decision in which case, his Honor said, went upon this, "that the widow had acquired under the will a much greater provision than she was entitled to as dower, and it was held, therefore, that she was barred of dower by a clear implication; and the learned judge satisfied himself of the intention of the testator, and of the law upon the whole subject of amplitude of provision, and he thought it was clearly the intention that she should not have both. But that case is far from being a decision, that the mere circumstance of a testator giving a leasing power to his trustees is enough to raise an implication of his intention to exclude his widow from her dower. . . . The whole amount of the provision made for his widow is an annuity of 20*l.*; and I find also a provision made for a stranger of exactly the same amount. So far from there being in this case the great and governing circumstance that existed in the case of Hall v. Hill—the provision for the widow as compared with the amount of the assets—that, instead of being an ample provision, it was such, that if put to her election, the widow would have elected to take her dower."

An examination of Hall v. Hill will, it is believed, shew that there has been no misapprehension of the meaning of Lord St. Leonards, on the part of Sir J. L. Knight Bruce, L. J., and Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C. There the testator gave part of his estate to his widow, and also an annuity charged upon the whole estate, with powers of distress and entry in case of non-payment, and there was also contained in the will power "to lease, demise, or let all or any part of my estates and lands, for any term not exceeding thirty-one years;" and Lord St. Leonards, after an elaborate examination of the authorities, held that the widow was bound to elect between the provisions made for her by the will and her dower. "I am not aware how the power of leasing, in this case, can be exercised over all the estate, if the widow's right to dower be allowed. One can understand how the rents might be enjoyed, or the estate sold, subject to the claim for dower; but how could you demise an estate subject to the right of this lady to have a third part thereof set out by metes and bounds? You cannot give her the right of dower, and yet exercise the power of leasing over the whole of the estate out of which she is to have dower." His Lordship, in effect, says that the power of leasing given to the trustees was inconsistent with the notion that the widow was to enjoy dower as set out by metes and bounds, and that it followed, therefore, as a matter of course, that she must elect between her legal right to dower out of the estate devised wholly to the trustees, and the benefits conferred upon her by the will. His Lordship then proceeds with some other observations, perhaps somewhat ambiguous, which, it is conceived, Sir J. Stuart, V. C., has understood in a sense different from what they were intended to convey. "If," continued his Lordship, "I am bound to spell out the intention of the testator, I think, looking at the whole frame of the will, that the testator meant to provide for his wife by the will. He gives her a house and the furniture; he gives her also an annuity out of the general estate; and she has acquired under the will a much greater provision than she would have been entitled to as dower in the ordinary way. That she is of this opinion is evident, because she has elected to take under the will, if required to make an election. I hold, therefore, that she is barred of dower, and that by clear implication. I have satisfied myself of the intention of the testator. I despair, as I have already said, of reconciling the authorities on this subject, but I follow what I consider the best. As, therefore, the widow has elected to take under the will, I must declare that she is barred of her claim to dower." Now, all that Lord St. Leonards meant by these concluding observations appears to be, that he had come to the conclusion, from the power of leasing being inconsistent with the widow's claim to dower, that the testator did not intend her to have it in addition to what he had given her by the will; that she had in reality taken more by the will than the law would have given to her in the shape of dower; that by the widow electing to take the provision made for her by the will, she had shewn that such was her opinion; that she was therefore barred of dower. By these observations also it is possible that his Lordship meant that no question as to compensation arose, the dower being of less value than what she elected to take.

Lord St. Leonards, however, himself is the best exponent of his own meaning in Hall v. Hill, for in the subsequent case of O'Hara v. Chalmers, (1 Jo. & Lat. 665), where the question as to the relative value of the widow's dower, as compared either with the testator's assets, or the benefits conferred upon her by the will, was not discussed, but in which, from the widow having elected to take dower, it may be presumed that the dower was more valuable than what was given to her by the will—Lord St. Leonards, as to one branch of the case, says, "the power of leasing decides this part of the case. Taking the whole will together, I am of opinion that the widow is bound to elect. The case comes within the principle of Hall v. Hill, and I see no reason to depart from that decision."

It is submitted, therefore, that the view taken by Sir J. L. Knight Bruce, L. J., and Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C., as to the decision of Hall v. Hill, is correct, and indeed is in accordance with the current of authorities. (See Roadley v. Dixon, 3 Russ. 192; Miall v. Brain, 4 Mad. 119; and Taylor v. Taylor, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 727).

Independent of authority, the decision of Sir J. Stuart, V. C., is open to grave objections. Why is the amount of the gift conferred by the will upon the wife the test for determining whether it was the testator's intention that such gift was to be in substitution for a claim she had upon other property, which he has given to others in derogation of such claim? Even assuming that in any particular case the provision made for a wife is small, testators have a right to be, and often are, capricious. Again: a husband may know that his wife is well provided for aliunde; by his giving her, therefore, no more than a stranger, as in Warburton v. Warburton, he may, under peculiar circumstances, have exercised a sound discretion; although, as we have before said, he has a perfect right to be capricious.

But how are we to determine what constitutes, to use the expression of Sir J. Stuart, V. C., "amplitude of provision?" How are we to draw a line between amplitude and exility? A "competency" has been defined as "a little more than a man has got." Perhaps "amplitude of provision" may be defined with as much, but not greater, legal accuracy; and if adopted as a test, or even as "a governing circumstance," in determining the intention of a testator, it will lead to as much litigation as was occasioned by decisions as to what was an illusory and what a substantial execution of a power, upon which subject the observations of Sir W. Grant, M. R., are well worthy of perusal. (See Butcher v. Butcher, 9 Ves. 393).

In the report of Warburton v. Warburton it appears that the opinion of Sir J. Stuart, V. C., taken in chambers was in accordance with the opinion he afterwards expressed in court, viz. in favour of the widow not being put to her election. Now, a judge expressing an opinion in chambers has not the benefit of hearing the case argued before him by counsel, and may take a very decided view of a case either irrespective of, or after a full consideration of, the authorities. In the first instance it is probable that he would have a slight, in the latter a strong, though perhaps to himself insensible, leaning or bias towards the opinion he has already expressed. This practice, therefore, is liable to all the objections so ably pointed out by Lord St. Leonards, (in his Treatise on the Law of Property as administered by the House of Lords), of an appeal from a Lord Chancellor in the court below to himself alone in the House of Lords. (See p. 35). It is submitted, that whenever a point of any difficulty arises in chambers, the judge should reserve his consideration of it for full discussion in open court; or, if he decides it in chambers, the appeal should lie, not to himself, but to the Lords Justices.

XIII. Upon the application for such warrant, or upon the return thereof, the Taxing Master is to reconsider and review his taxation upon such objection, and he may, if he shall think fit, receive further evidence in respect thereof; and if so required by either party, he is to state, either in his certificate of taxation or by reference to such objection, the grounds and reasons of his decision thereon, and any special facts or circumstances relating thereto.

XIV. Any party who may be dissatisfied with the certificate of the Taxing Master as to any item or part of an item which may have been objected to as aforesaid, may apply to the Court by motion or petition for an order to review the taxation as to the same, and the Court may thereupon make such order as to the Court shall seem just; but the certificate of the Taxing Master shall be final and conclusive as to all matters which shall not have been objected to in manner aforesaid.

XV. Such motions and petitions are to be heard and determined upon the evidence which shall have been brought in before the Taxing Master, and no further evidence is to be received upon the hearing thereof, unless the Court shall otherwise direct.

"This is a useful volume, upon the plan of Smith's Leading Cases. A case is taken, which expounds some leading principle of equity; to this Mr. Macnaghten has appended a note, in which he collects the subsequent cases, that shew the application to particular circumstances of the principle determined in the leading case—in fact, the expansion of the law; its growth thenceforward down to the present time. There is no method so apt as this for acquiring a scientific knowledge of the law; and therefore we recommend every law student to peruse the volume before us with profound attention. It will help to lay a solid foundation of law in him which will be of infinite service in his after studies and practice."—Law Times, Dec. 14, 1850.

"These are the sort of reports we wish to encourage. This volume has been very judiciously selected from heaps of rubbish, a notice not only of old cases, but of new ones, which are really useful to the Profession. The notes are after the fashion of Smith's Leading Cases, and they are tersely and ably written."—Law Magazine, Feb. 1851.

The important subject of the measure of damages is daily receiving new illustrations in our courts of justice. It is only in comparatively recent times that questions of this nature have been brought within the domain of legal science, inasmuch as formerly it was the custom to leave them at large to the jury, whose discretion in such matters was very seldom interfered with by the Court. The jury were said to be "chancellors," who might give such damages as "the case required in equity." (2 Roll. Ab., "Trial," 703, pl. 9).

It is now, however, admitted that there are certain fixed principles by which, in a majority of cases, the jury should be regulated in their assessment of damages; that it is the duty of the judge to direct the jury upon these principles; and that if they are manifestly disregarded, the Court will interfere in order to see that right is done between the parties. The line is, doubtless, to be drawn with care, in order to prevent a usurpation by the judges of the true functions of a jury; but yet, in the greater number of instances, it can and ought to be drawn so as to be productive of advantage to the suitors and to the cause of justice. We propose briefly to consider the leading principles which may now be said to be established upon this subject. But let us first endeavour to remove one of the many erroneous impressions produced by the use of certain words, which either never had, or have ceased to have, a definite meaning. Too much weight, it appears to us, is sometimes attached to the forms of actions as influencing the amount of damages. We hear a "wrongdoer" spoken of as if any amount of damages might properly be awarded against him; this expression is confined to defendants in actions ex delicto; and then further distinctions are sought to be made, sometimes without sufficient grounds, in the different species of actions ex delicto. Now, the fact is, that a man who wilfully breaks a contract is often as much a "wrongdoer" as one who commits an injury remediable only by an action of tort; sometimes he is more of a wrongdoer than the other, as, for instance, where confidence has been reposed in him. Again: the forms of actions do not of themselves afford any certain criteria; sometimes they are convertible in practice. Thus, where a wrong has been done, the party injured may often waive the tort, and treat the matter as one of contract: he has also frequently a choice of several actions of tort; as, for instance, if his goods are taken from him, he may, in general, sue either in trover or in trespass de bonis asportatis. In one respect, a substantial difference has been recognised between actions of trespass and trover, viz. where the article taken or converted is of a fluctuating value, and there has been a demand and refusal to deliver it at a period when it was of a higher value than it possessed when first taken. Here, if the action be trespass, the taking alone is the wrong, and only the value at the time of the taking can be awarded; but if it be trover, as the conversion is the gist of the action, and the plaintiff is entitled to the value of the article at the time of the conversion, he may recover the value either at the time of the first conversion, or at the time of the subsequent conversion, viz. when it was demanded and refused. (See Martin v. Porter, 5 M. & W. 351). It is difficult, however, on principle, to see why a trespasser should be better treated than a converter of goods: in the former case, the defendant has been a wrongdoer ab initio; in the latter, he is supposed to have obtained the goods rightfully in the first instance, and then to have wrongfully appropriated them. It might be proper to give the same effect to the demand and refusal in both cases.

The true principle to be adopted in the assessment of damages is to place the party injured as near as may be in the same position as if the wrong had never been inflicted. This rule is, however, limited, on the one hand, by subordinate rules relating to the remoteness of damages; and, on the other hand, it is enlarged, in some instances, by reason of the presence of aggravating circumstances. A very clear rule has been recently laid down for the purpose of regulating the amount of damages upon a breach of contract, namely, that it should be such as naturally flows from the breach, or such as the parties may be reasonably supposed to have contemplated upon the making of the contract. (Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341; see 18 Jur., part 1, p. 358). If there has been fraud, the jury might perhaps be justified in giving damages by way of punishment on the fraudulent party. (See Code Civil, liv. 3, tit. 3, s. 1150). Wrongs inflicted independently of contract are either to property, to the person, or to personal feelings. In the first instance, the injury can be calculated with tolerable accuracy, and the amount should represent the actual pecuniary loss sustained by the party. The damages are to be compensatory, not exemplary or vindictive. If, however, there have been circumstances of fraud, malice, or oppression, the jury may, it appears, award a larger amount as punitive damages. In the two latter cases, where the injury is to the person or the feelings, the principle of compensation should still be kept in view, as far as it can be; but the standard must vary so much, according to all the circumstances, that no fixed rule can be laid down; the jury have a large discretion, which will not be interfered with by the Courts, unless the amount awarded is so excessive as to amount to a manifest injustice.

We have received an abusive letter from Mr. Wharton, attributing our review of his "Articled Clerks' Manual" to interested motives. As it does not contain a word in defence of the book, we cannot insert any part of it.

CODIFICATION*.

Those who contend for what they call "codification," or the conversion of all law into a written and systematically arranged code—not like the Code Napoleon, a code without a single definition, requiring a constant reference to precedent for the meaning of all its technical terms, but a code containing within itself all that is necessary for its own interpretation, together with a perpetual provision for its own emendation and improvement"—protest against what they term the stupid blunder, that to make a code is to make new laws—that the existing laws are to be swept away, and a new set put in their place. "When we speak of expressing the law better," they say, "we mean nothing else. We ~~mean~~ alter the law in a title. We ~~mean~~ expression—to make that clear ~~that~~ distinct which is now am- ~~big~~ which is now a mass of disorder now prolix to a degree altogether intolerable—and that easy to be known which is now almost beyond comprehension." This is a great and important work, and the opinions of those who announced it in these clear and forcible expressions are entitled to all respect. But in proportion to the vast importance of the work proposed should be the care that its nature is thoroughly understood before it is entered upon. It is easy to say, "Begin immediately—codification, like any other work, is only to be done by working at it." But then suppose we begin at the wrong end, or begin and work altogether on a false principle; and suppose, which is possible, we find some little difficulty in discovering the "men among us who can marshal disordered ideas." It is much easier to find men who can confuse and disorder ideas, both in speaking and writing, than men who can snuff and marshal them.

In a former number of THE JURIST (No. 880, vol. 17, part 2, p. 459) the reasons were stated why a code of the entire statute and common law is an impossible operation. The common law codified would no longer be common law. Doubtless many of those who call for codification would say, "So much the better;" for the common law is a vast and not very easy branch of knowledge, which Bentham, the great apostle of codification, who saw, or at least looked at, only the abuses and corruptions of the common law, (such as were exhibited in the law of evidence and the rules of pleading, which Bentham's exertions mainly tended to reform), omitted no opportunity of attacking and ridiculing; and the far greater number of the advocates of complete codification are quite content with Bentham's authority against the common law, without going further. But there is no man so learned, and what is more, so wise, who would not do well not to place implicit confidence in the infallibility of his own knowledge and his own wisdom. One of the most able and distinguished friends of Bentham, a man of an unusually powerful and clear understanding, in advocating on one occasion his views, which were, like Bentham's, in favour of a complete code, cited in support of his position the authority of Bacon. The passage he quoted was the 59th Aphorism of Bacon's Exemplum Tractatus de Justitia Universali, sive de Fontibus Juris, in the De Augm. Scient., lib. 8:—"Quod si leges alie super alias accumulate in tam vasta excreverint volumina, aut tanta confusione laboraverint, ut eas de integro retractare, et in corpus sanum et habile redigere, ex usu sit; id ante omnia agito, atque opus ejusmodi opus heroicum esto; atque auctores talis operis, inter leges, et instauratores, rite et merito numerantur." Upon which he subjoined this remark:—"We have had a Legislature sitting during a space of 200 years from the time when Bacon announced the greatness and importance of the work of codification in those magnificent terms, and all this time the work is undone."

Now, the inference from this is, that Bacon's views on codification, as he expresses it, "De novis digestis legum," or "a digest of laws," corresponded in all points with those of the writer; whereas the aphorisms in that section of Bacon's Tractatus, in the 8th book of the De Augmentis, are little, or rather are nothing, more than a translation into Latin of what he has said in his "Proposition" to King James, "touching the compiling and amendment of the laws of England," though his meaning is much more obscurely brought out in the Latin version; which, indeed, its being a very concise abridgment of the English work may sufficiently account for.

In the 60th Aphorism, Bacon merely puts in a condensed form what he has said, in his Proposal for amending the Laws of England, respecting "the reducing or perfecting of the course or corps of the common laws." But in the 61st Aphorism he has very distinctly expressed his opinion that a totally different mode of treatment must be adopted in the business of digesting the common law and the statute law. To place this beyond dispute, we shall here quote the 61st Aphorism:—"Omnino vero ex usu fuerit, in novo digesto legum, leges pro jure communi receptas, quæ tanquam immemorales sunt in origine sua, atque ex altera parte statuta de tempore in tempus superaddita, seorsum digerere et componere: cum in plurimis rebus, non eadem sit in jure dicendo, juris communis et statutorum interpretatio et administratio. Id quod fecit Tribonianus in digesto et codice."

It is to be observed that he does not mean here by the words "digerere et componere" what Bentham and his party mean by codification. It is clear from the whole of the context in this Tractatus, as well as in his Proposal, that he means to do no more with the common law than what was described in this journal as practicable and most desirable, namely, to expunge precedents which have been overruled or have become obsolete, and to express in clear and concise language all that is material of circumstance, decision, or dictum in those which remain.

In his English work referred to, his Proposal for amending the Laws of England, Bacon answers an objection on this very point, of the essential distinction between common law and statute law, in terms which should leave no doubt as to his opinion on the subject:—

"Obj. IV. Labour were better bestowed in bringing the common laws of England to a text law, as the statutes are, and setting both of them down in method and by titles.

"Resp. It is too long a business to debate whether 'lex scripta, aut non scripta,' a text law, or customs well registered, with received and approved grounds and maxims, and acts and resolutions judicial, from time to time duly entered and reported, be the better form of declaring and authorising laws. It was the principal reason or oracle of Lysurgus that none of his law should be written. Customs are laws written in living tables, and some traditions the Church doth not disauthorise. In all sciences they are the soundest that keep close to particulars; and sure I am there are more doubts that rise upon our statutes, which are a text law, than upon the common law, which is no text law. But, howsoever that question be determined, I dare not advise to cast the law into a new mould. The work which I propound tendeth to pruning and grafting the law, and not to ploughing up and planting it again; for such a remove I should hold indeed for a perilous innovation."

In the number of THE JURIST above referred to have been stated the reasons against attempting to codify the common law. The process has also been pointed out which would reduce the existing thousand volumes of precedents to twenty, and would thereby "tend, more than any other measure, to facilitate and improve the practice and administration of the law." But then, in such a question, authority must go for something; and it may be objected, that the reasoning of an obscure scribe, at the best a mere lawyer, can hardly outweigh the authority of Bentham, a philosopher as well as a lawyer, and of some other celebrated names, lawyers too, and philosophers, and even statesmen besides.

Now, our answer to this objection is, that if Bentham was a lawyer and a philosopher, Bacon also was a lawyer and a philosopher; that he was at least equal to Bentham as a lawyer, and he was very much superior to him as a philosopher. And with regard to the other eminent persons who are for the codification of the entire common as well as statute law, we answer, that if they were statesmen, in addition to being philosophers and lawyers, Bacon also was a statesman, besides being a philosopher and lawyer. That Bacon's opinion was in favour of preserving the common law in the form of reports of decisions—"judicia anchoræ legum"—(De Augm., lib. 8, c. 3, aph. 73), is shewn by the passage we have cited from the "Proposition." The following extract from the same tract will shew how he proposed to amend the records of the common law.

"This work is to be done, to use some few words, which is the language of action and effect, in this manner.

"It consisteth of two parts, the digest or recompiling of the common laws, and that of the statutes.

"In the first of these, three things are to be done—

"1. The compiling of a book 'De Antiquitatibus Juris.'

"2. The reducing or perfecting of the course or corps of the common laws.

"3. The composing of certain introductive and auxiliary books touching the study of the laws."

After stating what is to be done in the first of these divisions, he proceeds:—

"For the second, which is the main, there is to be made a perfect course of the law in serie temporis, or year books, as we call them, from Edward I to this day. In the compiling of this course of law or year books, the points following are to be observed.

"First, all cases which are at this day clearly no law, but constantly ruled to the contrary, are to be left out; they do but fill the volume, and season the wits of students in a contrary sense of law." &c.

"Secondly, 'Homonymiæ,' as Justinian calleth them—that is, cases merely of iteration and repetition—are to be purged away, and the cases of identity which are best reported and argued to be retained instead of the rest; the judgments, nevertheless, to be set down every one in time as they are, but with a quotation or reference to the case when the point is argued at large; but if the case consist part of repetition, part of new matter, the repetition is only to be omitted.

"Thirdly, as to the 'Antinomiz,' cases judged to the contrary, it were too great a trust to refer to the judgment of the composers of this work to decide the law either way, except there be a current stream of judgments of later times, and then I reckon the contrary cases among cases obsolete, of which I have spoken before; nevertheless this diligence would be used, that such cases of contradiction be specially noted and collected, to the end those doubts that have been so long militant may, either by assembling all the judges in the Exchequer Chamber, or by Parliament, be put into certainty. For to do it by bringing them in question under feigned parties is to be dialiked. 'Nihil habeat forum ex scena.'

"Fourthly, all idle queries, which are but seminaries of doubt and uncertainties, are to be left out and omitted, and no queries set down but of great doubts well debated, and left undecided for difficulty; but no doubting or upstarting queries, which, though they be touched in argument for explanation, yet were better die than to be put into the books.

"Lastly, cases reported with too great prolixity would be drawn into a more compendious report; not in the nature of an abridgment, but tautologies and impertinences to be cut off. . . . The course being thus compiled, then it resteth but for your Majesty to appoint some grave and sound lawyers, with some honourable stipend, to be reporters for the time to come, and then this is settled for all times."

Bacon adds, in a note, "This constitution of reporters I obtained of the King after I was Chancellor; and there are two appointed with 100*l.* a year a piece stipend."

On authority, then, as well as on principle, the course is clear that ought to be followed respecting the great work of digesting our law; and to have it done at once, and without sacrificing another 200 years, we have but to set about it in such a manner that the result of the labour may be a work at once concise, perspicuous, and complete.

PRINCIPLES OF EQUITY.—The Principles of the High Court of Chancery, and the Powers and Duties of its Judges; designed as the Student's First Book on Equity Jurisprudence. By T. A. ROBERTS, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The want of some work on equity jurisprudence, giving to the student a general and yet concise statement of the leading features and doctrines of that very important branch of our complicated legal system, was long felt by the Profession. Some preliminary treatise was required to enable the student to feel his way before undertaking to grapple with the lengthy and necessarily technical treatises of Mr. Maddock, Mr. Spence, and Mr. Justice Story. The want in our legal literature thus so long complained of has at length been met with much ability by Mr. Roberts, in his treatise on the Principles of Equity."—Legal Examiner.

On the subject of the law of partnership, which has been much discussed lately in the pages of this journal, as well as elsewhere, a valuable contribution to our legal literature has recently been made by Mr. Tudor, in the shape of a translation of Pothier's celebrated treatise*, which Mr. Tudor has enriched with some excellent notes, illustrating the relation between the English and the French law, and between the old French law and the Code Napoleon. On the subject of partnership en commandite, we refer to the following passage, which very well and briefly discusses its peculiarities:—

"Since in partnerships en commandite† the prin-

* A Treatise on the Contract of Partnership, by Pothier: with the Civil Code and Code of Commerce relating to that subject, in the same order. Translated from the French, with Notes referring to the Decisions of the English Courts. By Owen Davies Tudor, of the Middle Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law. Butterworths, 1854.

† "In a partnership en commandite, when there are several partners jointly and severally responsible by name, whether all manage together, or one or more manage for all, the partnership is at the same time a partnership en nom collectif with principal partner, and in anonymous partnerships the known partner, alone makes, and each in his own respect to them, and a partnership en commandite with respect to those who are merely holders of funds, or shareholders. (Comm. Cod. of France, 24).

"The name of a partner en commandite cannot form part of the style of the firm. (Id. 25).

"The partner en commandite is only liable for losses to the amount of the funds which he has contributed, or ought to contribute, to the partnership. (Id. 26).

"The partner en commandite can do no act of management, nor be employed in the business of the partnership, even under a power of attorney. (Id. 27).

"In case of contravention of the prohibition mentioned in the preceding article, the partner en commandite is responsible, jointly and severally, with the partners en nom collectif, for all the debts and liabilities of the partnership. (Id. 28).

"An anonymous partnership is indicated by the designation of the object of its enterprise. (Id. 30).

"It is managed by temporary directors, who are revocable, and are either partners or not partners, with or without salaries. (Id. 31).

"The directors are only liable for the execution of the powers confided to them. They do not contract by reason of their management any personal or joint and several obligation with relation to the engagements of the partnership. (Id. 32).

"The partners are only liable for losses to the amount of their interest in the partnership. (Id. 33).

"With regard to partnerships en commandite, it will be observed, that the partners whose names appear to the world are, like partners en nom collectif, jointly and severally liable for all the debts; while the partners en commandite, whose names do not appear, if they comply with the provisions of the code, as to registration and non-interference with the management of the affairs of the partnership, will only be liable to the extent of their capital. This species of partnership does not exist in England, because it is here a maxim of the law that all persons entitled to a share in the profits of a partnership, even dormant or concealed partners, are, as regards third parties, notwithstanding any stipulations among themselves, liable in solidum for all the debts of the partnership. (See Blundell v. Winsor, 8 Sim. 601; Walburn v. Ingilby, 1 My. & K. 61, 76; Story Partn. 254). So, likewise, if a person advance money to a name, the contracts of the partnership, it follows that he renders himself alone liable, and that the partners en commandite, as well as the unknown partners, are not, according to the principles established, liable for the debts of the partnership to the creditors with whom the principal or known partner has contracted. They are only liable for them to their principal or known partner who has contracted them; they ought to acquit him from them according to the share which each has in the partnership; that is to say, the anonymous partner indefinitely, and the partner en commandite only to the amount of the capital which he has put into the partnership."

On this doctrine of limited liability, we confess ourselves, notwithstanding the verdict of the majority of the learned commissioners who have reported upon it, and notwithstanding the very able arguments with which we have been favoured by contributors to these pages, unable to see its dangers, and, on the contrary, able to perceive in it very great advantage and convenience. It should not be forgotten that, after all, the principle of limited liability has in it nothing new; that it has been applied in practice in this country for years; and that to give, by one general act of Parliament, power to parties to form partnerships, under given rules, with limited liability, would only be to extend the use of those incorporated partnerships under which so many of the most useful commercial enterprises of this country have been carried on. Every public company incorporated under act of Parliament is, in fact, a partnership en commandite; and when it is said that partnership with limited liability would lead to greater hollowness and instability in commerce—would, in fact, facilitate the cheating of creditors by impecunious partnerships—the answer is, first, practically, has it been found that business is so conducted in general by incorporated companies as to justify any such assumption? Is it the fact that companies are in general less faithful to their engagements, less stable in their commercial transactions, than private concerns? The example of the numerous joint-stock banks and insurance and other companies, to say nothing of canal and railway companies, that have carried on business, and carried off business from their rivals, during long years, affords surely very little support to the arguments against limited liability. Oh! but then, it is said, these are great public companies, and conducted under parliamentary regulation. But surely it can make no difference in the application of the principle whether the company is great or small, the magnitude of its undertakings being in proportion to the extent of its capital; and every partnership voluntarily entered into under a general act of Parliament might and would be regulated with quite as much precision as an incorporated company acting under its special act. But, in truth, it appears to us that the fears about limited liability are grounded altogether on a mistaken notion of the foundation of credit in trade. It is not true that credit is given to a firm because its partners are known, and known to be persons of substance, and on the faith of each being wholly liable; it is not true that one-tenth of the persons who have transactions with a partnership know who are its members, beyond the one or two leading members who are usually seen to be active; and it is not true that those who deal with a firm know, in general, anything about the fortunes of its members. At this day, for instance, take any great and old-established banking firms—say Child's, or Coutts's—it is not true that one-fiftieth part of the customers of those firms has any conception who are the real partners in them. It is idle, then, to talk of a man relying upon the unlimited liability of all the partners, when he does not even know whether there are two, three, or six partners, nor who they are, if they are at all. Credit is really given in business to firm at a rate of interest varying with the profits of the concern, he will be liable as a partner. Partnerships of this kind exist in all parts of the continent of Europe, and have been adopted in many of the States of North America; and it appears to be the opinion of mercantile men, and of lawyers in those countries, that they have greatly contributed to commercial prosperity, and towards bringing capital, which would otherwise have remained dormant, into active and useful circulation.

"The introduction of partnerships en commandite into this country has been recommended by many persons whose opinions are entitled to great consideration; and as it is believed that here, as well as elsewhere, they would promote the prosperity of small capitalists, and especially of the working classes, it is to be hoped that the commission now sitting for the purpose of taking into consideration the mercantile laws of England, Scotland, and Ireland, with a view to their assimilation, will not pass over without notice a subject of such deep importance. The principle of limited liability, as in partnerships en commandite, has been long since recognised and adopted in this country, where acts of Parliament or charters have constituted companies for public undertakings, such as for railways, gas or water works, docks, &c. The Irish Anonymous Partnership Act, 21 & 22 Geo. 3, c. 46, passed so far back as the year 1781-2, adopts the principle of limited liability; but as it interferes too much with what ought to be left to the discretion of the parties, its success has not been very encouraging.

"One of the objections which might formerly have been raised to partnerships en commandite was, that they were merely the means of obtaining a rate of interest varying with the profits of the concern, and were therefore within the mischief of usury; but as the laws against usury (except where land forms part of the security) have been repealed, this objection can now have no weight.

"Another objection is, that these kinds of partnership would lead to undue speculation. To this we may answer, that in private undertakings the owners of capital are in general the best judges as to whether they would or would not be productive; and that the Legislature, which confers the privilege of limited liability upon companies formed for carrying out undertakings of a public character, might depend upon individuals exercising ordinary prudence in their own affairs.

"Another objection is, that it is not right that the partner with limited liability should participate in the profits, and throw the losses upon innocent parties. There is, however, no weight in this objection; for if a partner en commandite contracts with third parties (as he does in all cases) that he will be liable only to the extent of his capital in the concern, those parties who, after full notice, deal with the partnership, have no natural or equitable right to more than what they have contracted for.

"That creditors are better circumstanced when part of the capital to carry on a business is subscribed by partners en commandite, than when it is borrowed by a firm, is clear. Thus, if a firm carries on business with a capital of 20,000*l.*, 10,000*l.* of which is borrowed, in the event of ill success, the lender, after obtaining perhaps a far higher rate of interest than the average rate of profits, either obtains a preference over the other creditors, or proves as a creditor for what remains unpaid of the 10,000*l.*; whereas a partner en commandite would only be entitled to a share of the profits, if there were any, and would be liable to the extent of his 10,000*l.* embarked in the concern to its creditors.

"The principal opponents of partnerships with limited liability will most likely be found amongst the large capitalists, who perhaps naturally fear that a combination of small capitalists, by bringing dormant capital into active competition with their own, would thereby diminish their profits."

firms, not on the knowledge of any particular man or men being in them, or on the knowledge of their fortunes, but because, when transactions have been entered into with that firm, it has been found punctual to its engagements. But if it were true that there is less security to the public where it deals with partners having only limited liability, surely the public would very soon find that out, and the result would be simply the giving of less credit in dealing with such firms than with firms trading under the ordinary law. The real question is one affecting the relation of partners inter se, not the relation between partnerships and the public. The question is, whether more capital would not be usefully employed in commerce if parties might, without the expense of a special act of Parliament, enter into them, not placing their whole fortune at the disposal of their partners. The public may be very safely left to take care of itself; it will, in dealing with partnerships en commandite, regulate its credit, as it does in dealing with any other firm, by the conduct of the firm, and not by an actual knowledge of its resources—a knowledge which it never, in practice, possesses.

Correspondence.

THE ARCHDEACON OF MIDDLESEX AND THE CHURCHWARDEN OF ST. PAUL'S, KNIGHTSBRIDGE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—Unusual attention has lately been called to the election of a churchwarden at St. Paul's, Knightsbridge. It has been made a question of Puseyism and Protestantism. But I think that attention should be called to a point of very great practical importance which appears to have been unnoticed; otherwise, while much is said about resistance to one form of ecclesiastical incroachment, another, still more dangerous, is acquiesced in.

The late election is stated to have been held because the archdeacon determined that the former election was invalid. Now, if there is one point clearer and more settled than another, it is, that the archdeacon has no jurisdiction to try or determine the validity of any election of churchwarden; it is simply his duty to swear in. If half-a-dozen present themselves for the purpose, he must swear them all in. The temporal courts alone can try and determine the validity of the election.

Mr. Westerton's second election is clearly a void election. If he is churchwarden now, it must be on the first election only, not on the second.

To admit for a moment the illegal doctrine and practice of the archdeacon thus interfering is simply to place the office of churchwarden in the hands of the ecclesiastical authorities. If this is submitted to, farewell to the principles which Mr. Westerton's supporters so strenuously assert, but have now practically abandoned.

Your obedient servant,

Serjeants'-inn, June 21, 1854. T. S.

The Right Hon. Sir John Jervis, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, has appointed William Plaskitt, of Gainsborough, Lincolnshire, Gent., to be one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the parts of Lindsey, in the county of Lincoln.

"This is a useful volume, upon the plan of Smith's Leading Cases. A case is taken which expounds some leading principle of equity; to this Mr. Macnaghten has appended a note, in which he collects the subsequent cases that shew the application to particular circumstances of the principle determined in the leading case—in fact, the expansion of the law; its growth thenceforward down to the present time. There is no method so apt as this for acquiring a scientific knowledge of the law, and therefore we recommend every law student to peruse the volume before us with profound attention. It will help to lay a solid foundation of law in him, which will be of infinite service in his after studies and practice."—Law Times, Dec. 14, 1850.

"These are the sort of reports we wish to encourage. This volume has been very judiciously selected from heaps of rubbish—a notice not only of old cases, but of new ones, which are really useful to the Profession. The notes are after the fashion of Smith's Leading Cases, and they are tersely and ably written."—Law Magazine, Feb. 1851.

SOME portions of the doctrine of release of suretyship, by acts between the creditor and principal debtor, have long been the subject of considerable doubt and conflict of opinion. There is no doubt, that, as a general rule, whenever the creditor does any positive act, by which he gives time to the principal debtor, without expressly reserving his rights against the surety, he releases the surety, on the principle that he has no right to vary the position of the surety. But when the creditor does some act, as between him and the principal debtor, by which time, or other indulgence, is given to the debtor, reserving expressly his rights against the surety, then there is considerable difficulty in saying when the surety is and when he is not released. From some of the cases this distinction, it would seem, is to be gathered—that if the creditor, giving time to the debtor, only covenants not to sue him, reserving his rights against the surety, that covenant shall be so read as not to amount to a variation of the position of the surety; that it is a covenant not to sue, only as between the creditor and debtor, but not a covenant not to sue if required by the surety; and that consequently the position of the surety as to his safety is not varied, his right never having been more than to require the creditor to enforce payment against the debtor. But if there is an absolute legal release of the debt, then the surety is released, although the right of the creditor against him may purport to be reserved, because then the creditor cannot sue at law, either of his own motion or at the instigation of the surety. The distinction is not, however, very clearly established, and it remains yet to be decided whether, in truth, there is any such. One can well understand how, when a debt, and the surety for it, are released to the debtor, any reservation of the right against the surety is idle, because one can well understand that neither the creditor for himself, nor for the surety, nor the surety in his name, can sue for an absolutely defunct debt. But there is great difficulty in understanding how, when the creditor has covenanted not to sue, he could be enabled to sue at law. We apprehend that in any such action at law, the Court of law could not look at any equity, if any such there be, enabling the creditor to rebut the effect of his own covenant, because another party, a stranger to it, is the mover of the action; and the only way in which one can conceive the thing to be worked out would be by a bill in equity by the surety, to be permitted to sue in the name of the creditor, and to restrain the debtor from setting up the covenant in bar. But the first difficulty in the way of such a proceeding would be, whether the Court has any jurisdiction to restrain the debtor, in an action, which is in reality as well as in form, between him and the creditor, from setting up that legal defence which the creditor has agreed to give him.

It seems, indeed, in the case of Newton v. Chorlton, (2 Drew. 337), to be assumed that the surety has a right to put the creditor in motion at all times against the principal debtor; but it appears to us, that all that the learned judge who decided that case meant was, that such is the right which the surety ought to have; not that the surety could not lose the remedy for the right, but that he ought not to be deprived of it, and that if he is deprived by any act of the creditor, then such act works his release; for, in a subsequent part of the same passage, (p. 338), he says, "The surety has a right to say, 'You must always hold yourself in a position to be placed in motion at my request against the principal debtor." The second objection to the interference of equity to put in train an action, notwithstanding a covenant not to sue by the creditor, would be this—that it would be simply an unnecessary proceeding. If the effect of the covenant not to sue is, at law, not such as to enable the defendant to plead it in bar when the action is at the instigation of the surety, then the surety can require no interference of equity: if, on the other hand, his power of enforcing his remedy at law is gone by the covenant not to sue, then it is clear that in equity, at least, his suretyship is released; and it would be time enough for equity to interfere to relieve him when the creditor attempts to proceed against him at law, supposing, which we apprehend is not the case, the creditor could proceed against him at law. We confess, it seems to us that any distinction between a covenant not to sue and a release is quite unsubstantial; and we apprehend that the law is, that any instrument by which, as between himself and the debtor, the creditor varies his own legal rights against the debtor, will also vary the rights of the surety, and relieve him, notwithstanding he may attempt or purport to reserve his rights against the surety.

In Newton v. Chorlton the point decided was of a different kind, viz. whether a creditor, taking, after the inception of the suretyship, additional securities, and then releasing them, thereby releases the surety; and it was held he does not, because the right of the surety is, that his position at the inception of the suretyship shall not be varied; therefore he has a right to every security held by the creditor at the date of the contract; but if the creditor afterwards gets better security, and then loses it, he puts the surety in no worse position than he was at the date of the contract.

Before concluding these cursory observations, we may call attention to a very recent case, (Jenkins v. Robertson, 2 Drew. 351), in which it was held, that a creditor establishing his right under a judgment in a creditors' suit against the estate of the surety, does not lose that right by afterwards suing the principal debtor at law, and giving him time. The Court considered the surety as liable no longer as surety, but under the decree, and therefore that the act of the creditor did not discharge him. It is not easy, however, to see how in such a case the principle, that the position of the surety shall not be varied, is complied with; for suppose the creditor to enforce his decree against the surety, and obtain an order for payment before the time given by the creditor to the principal debtor elapses, how could the surety proceed at law? And if it be said that the Court of equity would not permit the order for payment to be enforced, that would be, in effect, declaring the surety pro tanto released.

THE STATUTE-LAW COMMISSION.

MR. KER's third and final report has recently appeared, with an appendix containing papers by Messrs. Anstey, Brickdale, and Rogers, and extracts from former publications by Lord Brougham.

Mr. Ker thus recapitulates his suggestions as to how a permanent board or commission could be best employed in the improvement of the statute law, future as well as past:—

"1st. The gradual consolidation or rewriting of the statute law, combining, of course, with such consolidation or rewriting, all such improvements of the law as can be suggested; in short, continuing the process which has long been applied to isolated subjects and in a desultory way, but in a more rapid, careful, and uniform manner, thus at once producing immediate relief to the public from the present confused state of the statutes, improving the law where it requires improvement, incidentally clearing the statute-book of obsolete and unnecessary matter, setting an example of an improved style and form in drawing acts of Parliament, which may reasonably be expected to have considerable influence, and also (if the time is to be looked forward to when the formation and passing of a complete code of English law will be possible and expedient) collecting and preparing the materials for such a code—an intermediate process which I feel satisfied must be gone through before the law as it now exists can be transformed into anything that can properly be termed a code. (Second Report, pp. 9—14).

"2nd. Preparing or settling bills for the Government and such other parties as should choose to apply to them, and making reports on such bills, not settled by themselves, as should be referred to them. (Second Report, p. 13). To which I may add another important function, to which I did not refer in my former reports, but which has been pointed out to me by Lord Brougham, whose vigilance and experience never allow any opportunity for practical reform of the law to escape him, namely,

"3rd. Watching bills in their progress through the two Houses, and reporting on all alterations which appear to make the enactments inconsistent with themselves or with other branches of the law, or which otherwise require notice.

"4th. I have further submitted that anything in the nature of a complete digest or consolidation into a code, either of the statute law alone, or of the statute and common law combined, cannot be commenced at present. (Second Report, pp. 11—14).

"5th. And also, that it is not advisable at present to attempt to publish or enact anything in the nature of what is popularly understood by a revised edition of the statutes. (Second Report, pp. 5, 6).

"6th. Nor to attempt to pass a general declaratory act, abrogating all the statutes already repealed, expired, or otherwise not in force. (Second Report, pp. 7, 8).

"7th. Nor to prepare any pure digests or consolidations of the existing law, not in the form of bills, but merely for the information of the Legislature and the public, or as materials for future bills—a process which, though not without its utility, would not, in my judgment, repay the labour and time which it would require. (Second Report, p. 9). [Yet a process which is necessarily gone through in a more or less perfunctory manner, and with proportional risk to the result, whenever any attempt is made to amend the law. We conceive that the bills of a consolidation board would not be received by the Profession with any confidence if they were not accompanied by a full statement of the materials employed, which, for the convenience of the draftsman as much as others, must be classified.]

"Some disappointment has been expressed at the apparently humble nature of the proposals, and in particular it has been objected, that my doubts as to the practicability of the consolidation of the whole of our statute law at once cannot be reconciled with my recognition of the complete success of a similar experiment in some of the United States of America."

The substance of Mr. Ker's answer to this objection is, that the American codes were prepared and passed with the support of a public opinion almost amounting to enthusiasm in favour of the code, the reverse of which is to be expected here; that the laws and legislative machinery of one state of a confederation are more manageable than those of an empire; that in each state there was greater unanimity of opinion on the matters included in the code than can ever be hoped for here in respect of our laws, which include such subjects as the Church establishment, foreign and colonial relations, the laws of property in their relation to the different classes of society, the representation of the people, partnership, capital punishment, &c.; and that while, as a consequence of the popularity of the American codes, they received from the Courts a liberal interpretation, it is to be feared that a British code would be interpreted and administered by our own judges in a narrow, hostile, and carping spirit. Now, it is conceded that the difficulties are greater here than they were in America, but they are not different in kind; and the question is, whether we shall encounter them and do the work properly, or shirk them and be always pretending to do it; for the gradual consolidation of the statute law on the plan proposed by Mr. Ker would never be more than a pretence of approximating to such a code of the written law as is desirable and possible. The whole and all the parts of a well-arranged code are mutually dependent, and we might as well attempt to consolidate all the knitting-needles in Galway gradually into a stocking-mill as to make and pass a code by instalments.

No code can be worth its inevitable cost which is not founded on a principle of arrangement including every possible subject of legislation, so that new enactments may be referred with certainty to their proper places, and amendment may no longer mean derangement. Before the code is commenced, the province or scope of the statute law must be defined, that draftsmen may not have to trust to their wits and good fortune for the solution of such questions, for example, as that discussed by Mr. Brickdale à-propos of his Wills Bill, whether a rule of construction is a proper subject for enactment, and if proper, how it should be dealt with. And provision must be made for uniformity of style in the code and its amendments, not by settling a statutory vocabulary and phrase-book, but by investigating the logical elements of written law, and establishing general formulae of enunciation. Mr. Coode, in his pamphlet on "Legislative Expression," has opened up this part of the ground with great ability; but much remains to be done, and especially with respect to the enunciation of enactments respecting what Blackstone calls the "rights of things."

Nothing of this kind has been attempted or suggested by the contributors to the present report. They have taken possession of their province of the statute law, and commenced the work of re-organisation without pausing to define its limits; yet the definition is not hard to settle, and when settled it separates the field of work from a wilderness in which many legislators have been lost. The principle of our constitution and laws is, that, subject to alteration by the Legislature, every part of our social economy is regulated by precedent. This precedent, by whatever jurisdiction obeyed or enforced, is the common law in its widest sense. Even the Legislature is subject to precedent, and must submit its cubs to those ragged nurses of whom Mr. Ker complains, in their dens to be licked into shape and acquire regular habits—their second or common-law nature.

By precedent we mean, as we have before explained, (17 Jur., part 2, p. 459), a decision on an individual case, involving a principle, to be deduced, not literally from the words of the judgment, but by induction from the circumstances and the decisions in that and in other cases founded on or illustrating the same principle. Practical lawyers know (what amateur reformers can scarcely be made to credit or even conceive) that this induction from precedent is far more easy and certain than the interpretation of the most exact written law. Upon it alone depends the existence of the law as a science, its applicability to new and unforeseen cases, and such certainty as it has; and the sovereignty of precedent is the origin and essence of political and social freedom, for it is "the breach of custom that is breach of all." Where, as in France, precedent is not regarded, law cannot be a science, and no code can secure an impartial, pure, and certain administration of justice. It is the fashion to assert, that while the science of law flourishes abroad, it scarcely exists in England; but the saying is most in the mouths of those who know least of English law. We have satisfied ourselves, both from the internal evidence afforded by the works of foreign jurists, and by conversation with more than one practical foreign lawyer, that though the libraries of France and Germany are rich in dilettanti legal literature, legal science has very little to do with the administration of the laws in those countries.

When the common law is said to be flexible, the meaning is, not that it can be bent to the wishes of the executive, but that it is applicable to every new combination of circumstances by reason of it proceeding on principles deduced or deducible, like the laws of nature, from observation, and not limited by any text or formal enunciation; and thus the flexibility of the common law and its certainty are due to the same cause. A system of law depending entirely on precedent may be defective or objectionable in substance, but its indications in any case that arises are absolutely certain, so far as anything depending on the fallible apprehension and reason of man can be so.

The province of the statute law is, from time to time to supply the omissions of the common law, to alter its rules when they are deemed impolitic, and to abrogate its precedents when they are found to be erroneous. If the Legislature goes beyond its province of enacting new rules, and attempts to reduce any part, however insignificant, of the common law to a text, without the design of altering it, it incurs, for no object, the certainty of unsettling the law, and a great risk of altering it in an unforeseen manner. The task of dealing with erroneous precedents is peculiar, and has seldom been properly performed. When a case decided contrary to principle is binding or likely to be followed as a precedent, and the inconvenience justifies legislative interference, the right course seems to be, not to attempt a declaration of the law, which will necessarily be imperfect, but simply to lead the Courts back to the scent, by enacting that the erroneous precedent shall not be an authority. Thus the rule in Dumport's case might be abolished, by enacting that,

"When a Court of justice has to decide a question touching the subsistence of a condition, such Court may decide the question without regard to the authority of Dumport's case, Coke's Reports, part 4, page 119, or of any case decided to the like effect before this enactment."

Here is no saving of cases in which the abrogated precedent has been already in any manner acted upon, because such cases may be more safely left to the discretion of the Courts. Another example is suggested by Lord St. Leonards' Act to amend the Law of Wills:—

"When any Court of justice has to decide on the validity of a will made before or after this enactment, with respect to the position of the testator's signature, such Court may decide the question without regard to the authority of any decision made before this enactment."

Mr. Brickdale, in a paper printed with the first report, rightly describes the statute law as "only a collection of fragmentary exceptions and alterations, unintelligible except with reference to the whole law, which is to be found elsewhere." From this he infers that a digest of the statute law will not be a manual of the law, or in fact present any of the advantages which are generally expected from a digest [of the whole common and statute law.] That is true, but the duty of the commissioners was to ascertain the right course, and to follow it, without regard to what was generally expected. If Mr. Brickdale still dreams of a manual of law, let him read Mr. Justice Coleridge's letter on the Criminal Law Bills. The statute law, whether in its present form or in that of a code, must always be a collection of fragmentary exceptions and alterations; and until the commissioners acknowledge and act on that truth, they will labour in vain.

Mr. Ker repeats, and insists on his proposition, that the processes of digesting and amending cannot be separated. That is so with regard to the result, but in preparing for that result the processes are necessarily conducted separately, and should be so recorded. The consolidator first collects and arranges the existing statutory materials; then determines what amendments (not in the design, but in the execution) are necessary; and, finally, expresses the result in his own language. No one will trust any draftsman or board to do this and to report merely the result, with an intimation that such and such alterations have been made. The arranged collection of the old materials must be submitted, with the bill, to professional criticism, as a safeguard against omissions and errors—as a test, in short, both of the bill and of the draftsman.

Mr. Anstey's contribution consists principally of a bill to consolidate the laws relating to the national debt, with some accessory bills relating to the consolidated fund, public officers of the civil service, public salaries, annuities, pensions, and allowances, &c., and explanatory observations. This appears to be a conscientious and able performance. There is also a bill, in nineteen sections, "for the interpretation of enactments," in which Mr. Anstey says he has "endeavoured to enact the more common interpretation clauses of statutes, and to supply a few others, but above all to render the rules of judicial construction more simple, broad, and uniform." We shall presently notice some clauses of this bill.

Mr. Brickdale presents drafts of new statutes on wills and on apportionments, and Mr. Ker refers to them as affording materials for considering the advantage of "enunciating principles of law in a very general and abstract manner," as contrasted with the more usual method of attempting to anticipate misconstruction by an enumeration of particulars—a practice which, Mr. Ker says, has originated in, and has reacted on, the unwillingness, if not inaptitude, on the part of the Bench to do justice to statutes drawn in general and abstract terms—an unwillingness or inaptitude which he thinks is apparent in the tone and general character of the comments lately made by the judges on the Criminal Law Bills submitted to them by the Lord Chancellor—comments which have drawn upon them the almost ubiquitous criticism of a noble law reformer*. It is not surprising that Mr. Ker, a member of the Criminal Law Commission, and Lord Brougham, its zealous champion, should dissent from the judges' condemnation of the bills; but we cannot see anything objectionable in the tone and general character of their comments, with the exception of those by the late Mr. Justice Talfourd. The judges unanimously recommend that the statute criminal law should be digested, and that the common law should be left undisturbed in its present form, except in those particulars in which it requires alteration—a recommendation which proves that the judges have taken a more enlarged and just view of the subject than the Criminal Law Commissioners. Hear Mr. Justice Wightman:—

"With respect to so much of the criminal law as is founded on statutes, I am not aware of any well-founded objection to the reduction of it into a single statute or partial code, or of any difficulty in the framing of such a code. The case, however, is very different with respect to that part of the criminal law which depends upon the common law. In applying the rules and principles of the common law to any particular case, the Court is not fettered nor embarrassed by being obliged to put a construction upon particular words or expressions, but it is sufficient if the case falls within any rule or principle to be deduced from the authorities. If, however, the whole of the criminal law were reduced into one or more statutes, that part of it which now depends upon the common law would become statute law, and, like other statute law, must be construed according to the words and expressions used in the statute, and not according to general rules and principles, at the risk of raising difficulties, uncertainties, and doubts, from which the law as it exists at present may be free, and which it may not be easy or even possible to foresee, until the law as altered is subjected to the test of actual practice and experience."

Whether the criticisms of the judges on the details of the Criminal Law Bills were captious or not may be a matter of opinion, but that they have frequently hit the mark is proved by the admissions of Messrs. Graves and Lonsdale, in their printed apology for the bills.

Mr. Ker does not express himself very clearly on this question of style, but his meaning seems to be, that while statutes expressed in very general or abstract terms are not likely to be properly construed by the judges, statutes drawn on the opposite principle are liable to fail from intrinsic defects; and that the drafts of new statutes on wills and on apportionments by Mr. Brickdale are submitted as specimens of the scientific style of drawing, and to raise the question as to their probable reception by the judges—a question of great importance, if it had any foundation in fact; for what the present judges as a body are, the Bench will probably be in all times, unless Mr. Ker hopes by an improved code to educate the rising judicial generation into better ways of thinking. We conceive, however, that there is no foundation for the doubt, and that it will be found that whenever the judges have had the privilege of construing a well-drawn enactment they have shown themselves competent and worthy of the trust.

Mr. Ker bespeaks a favourable consideration of Mr. Brickdale's bill as contrasted with the Wills Act, which was prepared with the assistance of all the learning of the day. We cannot admit this plea, for the draft is proposed as a model, and Mr. Brickdale has had the advantage not only of the Wills Act—the cream of the learning in question—but also of all the able forensic and other comments made upon it since it became law; and, not to mention Mr. Ker's assistance, which we take for granted, the draft has, if we are not mistaken, received improvements from a hand inferior to none of those concerned in settling the Wills Act.

Mr. Brickdale has here, and more at length in another paper, some remarks on the use of interpretation clauses and definitions which deserve attention. His conclusion seems to be, that definitions may occasionally be useful—symbols, such as require interpretation clauses, never. Ours, on the contrary, is in favour of the occasional use of symbols, and the absolute exclusion of definitions. Mr. Brickdale says, "The definition of terms which are really ambiguous is something quite different from the ordinary 'interpretation clauses' or 'glossaries.' No doubt there are a certain number of such terms (though I have not at present a list of any to offer) which might be defined with advantage." And he says that the operation should be confined to such words. His instances are "month" and "England." But the only inconvenience with respect to these and similar words is, that precedents have affixed to them a meaning in the courts which is not the usual one. If permission were given to the judges to read "month" as meaning a calendar month, and "England" as including Wales, whenever they should think that to be the meaning, there would be an end of the inconvenience. But to enact that those words should always have those meanings would be an interference with language in the opposite direction. No word is ambiguous if it is properly used, and the use of words does not require or admit of legislative aid. If a word becomes ambiguous, in a critical sense, from improper use, either the meaning can be inferred from the subject-matter and context—a process peculiarly fit to be left to the unfettered intelligence of the Courts—or it cannot, in which case the composition becomes nonsense, and judicial and legislative interpretation must be equally at fault.

Mr. Brickdale's observations on those symbols which are the subjects of the ordinary interpretation clauses and are adopted for convenience merely would be very just if they were confined to the abuse or unskilful use of them; but to say that the use of arbitrary symbols, which is the soul of the calculus in every form, and is an important element in all technical language, is wholly inadmissible in legislative expression, is a startling proposition. Let us ask Mr. Brickdale how he would have framed the Reform Act, or the Property and Income Tax Act, without using the symbols, "Schedule A.," "Schedule B.," &c., or others equivalent to them? Wherever a long phrase or an assemblage of many particulars has to be frequently repeated, a short symbol for it is useful. The only points to be attended to are, that the game is worth the candle, and that the symbol is such and so used as not to satisfy the reader by its intrinsic meaning, but to suggest to him, if he does not already know it, the necessity of referring to a glossary. The expedient of printing interpreted words in italics has been suggested, but it is safer to rely on the skilful choice of them.

Correspondence.

COUNTY COURTS AND SUPERIOR COURT JUDGMENTS.

SIR,—I am obliged to "A Constant Reader" for referring me to the case of Winsor v. Dunford, (12 Jur., part 1, p. 629), in answer to my letter inserted in No. 907 of your journal, but which I find has been overruled by the operation of the 18th section of the County Courts Extension Act, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, viz. "That if any party shall sue another in any county court for any debt or other cause of action for which he hath already sued him and obtained judgment in any other court, the proof of such former suit having been brought and judgment obtained may be given, and the party so suing shall not be entitled to recover in such second suit, and shall be adjudged to pay three times the costs of such second suit to the opposite party."

This, I submit, settles the question; and beg to add, that I should not have troubled you with this correspondence had it not been induced by the second paragraph of "A County Court Judge's" letter in THE JURIST, No. 904.

When I first addressed you I was not thinking of the converse case of an action in a superior court on the judgment of a county court, which is not allowed, but only of the question the subject of this discussion; nevertheless I thank you for referring me to cases bearing upon the point.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. B. H.

[The enactment cited by our correspondent applies to a second suit in a county court for the same cause of action. A plaint on a judgment recovered is founded on a new cause of action, and is not within the enactment.—Ed.]

REGULA GENERALIS.

ORDER OF COURT.—June 21, 1854.

THE Right Hon. ROBERT MONSEY Lord CRANWORTH, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, doth hereby, in pursuance of an act of Parliament passed in the fifteenth and sixteenth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the Relief of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery," and in pursuance and execution of all powers enabling him in that behalf, order and direct as follows, that is to say—

I. From and after the 2nd July, 1854, all office copies and other copies of pleadings, proceedings, and documents in the Court of Chancery shall (except in the cases hereinafter mentioned) be counted and charged for after the rate of seventy-two words per folio, and where such copies or any portion thereof shall comprise columns containing figures, each figure shall be counted and charged for as one word.

II. From and after the 2nd July, 1854, the charge for all transcripts of accounts made in the office of the Accountant-General shall be after the rate of 2s. for each opening of such transcript, consisting of the debtor and creditor sides of the account to be entered therein.

III. The charges hereinbefore directed to be made shall be paid by means of stamps, according to the General Orders of the Court of Chancery in that behalf now in force, so far as relates to documents furnished by the said Court.

(Signed) CRANWORTH, C.

LONDON, JULY 8, 1854.

On a former occasion (ante, p. 133) we stated several of the rules which seemed to us to be deducible from decisions upon rights and duties connected with the reparation of property, and we now propose to consider somewhat more in detail the extent of a tenant's liability under an express covenant to repair.

Agreements of this nature are always construed liberally by the Courts in favour of the landlord; (Harris v. Jones, 1 Moo. & R. 173); at the same time, they receive a reasonable construction; and a general covenant to repair is satisfied by the premises being kept in substantial repair, according to the fair intention of the parties as expressed in their agreement. A literal performance of the covenant is not required. (Ib.)

A covenant to keep a house and outbuildings in good repair obliges the tenant to put them in that condition; and the tenant is not justified in keeping them in bad repair because he found them in that condition. The extent of the repair in such case is to be measured by the age and class of the buildings: their general condition as to repair at the time of the demise is also to be regarded, so as to measure the amount of damages by reference to that state, although it does not affect the construction of the covenant. Thus, Parke, B., said, in the case in which this rule was laid down, (Payne v. Haine, 16 M. & W. 540), "If at the time of the demise the premises were old and in bad repair, the lessee was bound to put them in good repair as old premises, for he cannot 'keep' them in good repair without putting them into it. He might have contracted to keep them in the state in which they were at the time of the demise. . . . The cases all shew that the age and class of the premises let, with their general condition as to repair, may be estimated, in order to measure the extent of the repairs to be done. Thus, a house in Spitalfields may be repaired with materials inferior to those requisite for repairing a mansion in Grosvenor-square; but this lessee cannot say he will do no repairs, or leave the premises in bad repair, because they were old and out of repair when he took them." Rolfe, B., said, "The term 'good repair' is to be construed with reference to the subject-matter, and must differ, as that may be a palace or a cottage; but to 'keep in good repair' pre-supposes the putting into it, and means that during the whole term the premises shall be in good repair."

In such cases, though the tenant may shew generally in what state the premises were at the commencement of the term, and whether they were new or old, it is not competent to him to shew it in matters of detail. (Mantz v. Goring, 4 B. & Cr. 451; and see Burdett v. Withers, 7 Ad. & El. 136, commented upon in 16 M. & W. 545).

In accordance with this class of cases, it has been held that a covenant to repair contained in an underlease, though in the same language as the covenant in the original lease, may be different in effect, owing to the underlease having been granted subsequent to the original lease, and when the premises had become in a different condition. (Walker v. Hatton, 10 M. & W. 249). There was no question of a covenant to keep in "good" repair premises which were in fact in "bad" repair, as in the former case; and it is consistent with the doctrine laid down in the previous case, that in estimating the amount of damages, the general condition of the premises at the time of the demise is to be regarded.

In connexion with the liability of a sub-lessee, we may here refer to the recent case of Smith v. Peat, (9 Exch. 161), in which the liability of an assignee of a lease was considered. Martin, B., there said, "We never can ascertain the exact amount of damage which occurred during the time that each assignee held the lease. In my opinion, the measure of damages is the loss the landlord would undergo if he sold his reversion in the market." And it had been previously held at Nisi Prius, by Coleridge, J., that in covenant for non-repair of premises held under a lease, which had at the time of the action several years to run, the measure of damages was, not the amount that would be required to put the premises in repair, but the amount to which the reversion was injured. (The Worcester School Trustees v. Rowlands, 9 Car. & P. 734). His Lordship said, if the lease had 100 years to run, and the covenant was broken in the first year, the landlord would be entitled to some damages for that breach of covenant, though the lease would not expire for ninety-nine years to come; but in estimating the damages where the lease has a long time to run, it was not fair to take the amount that would be necessary to put the premises into repair as the measure of the damages, for in such cases, where the damages were awarded to the landlord, he was not bound to expend them in repairs, neither could he do so without the tenant's permission to enter on the premises. It is no defence to an action for non-repair during the defendant's tenancy that the plaintiff has no reversion or interest in the premises. (Bickford v. Parson, 5 C. B. 920). Such proof might be given to reduce the damages, and it probably would have the effect of reducing them to a merely nominal amount, unless the plaintiff shewed, that although his interest in the premises had expired, he was liable over to the superior landlord or some other person for the repairs.

THE STATUTE-LAW COMMISSION.

With reference to the question, whether a rule of construction can be properly enacted, which has been discussed by Mr. Tyrrell and the Real Property Commissioners, Mr. Brickdale, after citing the remarks published in the name of Mr. H. Sugden, says, "Notwithstanding these objections, it must be admitted that no practical difference exists between a rule of construction clearly ascertained and recognised by the Courts, and a similar rule enacted by act of Parliament. One is as binding and as inflexible as the other; and therefore, where any such rule exists which operates harshly or unjustly, it must necessarily be remedied by act of Parliament, or remain unremedied; for the Courts themselves, though they made it, have no power to alter it. Nothing but an act of Parliament, for instance, could have reversed the rule, that a devise of freehold land, without words of inheritance, gave a life estate only. The enactment of rules of construction seems, therefore, to be justified from necessity, and even on principle; for it is a necessary consequence of the principle, that the Courts can make such rules, but cannot alter them when made."

Here is the old confusion of common-law principles with statutory texts. The peculiarity and disadvantage of a statutory rule of construction is, that it must itself be construed before it can be applied, and can never be so happily conceived and expressed as exactly to effect the object of its framers. "But," it may be objected, "principles are expressed with perfect accuracy in the pure and mixed sciences; why not in law?" The answer is, that in textual law the expression of a principle takes the form of a rule, so that the analogy is between law and the applied sciences or scientific arts; and though it is true that in law, as in the applied sciences, the enunciation of a principle (i. e. a rule) may be made accurate, consistent in itself, and complete as a reflection of the idea on which it was framed, it cannot in either be complete and sufficient for future practice; for, in both, unforeseen combinations of circumstances—new problems—are continually arising and calling for new deductions, not from rules, but from theory, the generator of rules. Take a scientific art at any stage in its progress, settle its rules with the most enlarged human foresight, in the most abstract terms of the highest known calculus, and deprive it of further aid from theory, it instantly loses its creative faculty, and remains thenceforth a mere collection of rules of thumb. Such is law founded on texts alone, however excellent in design and expression.

But the expression "rule of construction" is frequently misunderstood. Legal rules of construction have properly nothing to do with the meaning of words. Language, whether technical or popular, is not a subject either for legislation or for judicial precedent. It is created and developed by natural causes beyond the reach of arbitrary convention, and, like other matters of usage, cannot be stereotyped in a formula. The laws even of technical language are part of the laws of nature. A common-law rule of interpretation that varies the meaning of words is necessarily a bad rule, and should be repealed, not by attempting to declare the true meaning, but simply by depriving the rule of its authority, in the manner already pointed out. For example, when a man devises all his land in Kent to his eldest son, he means to give him all his estate in the land; but when the effect of such a devise first came into question, the judges, from corrupt motives or from prejudice, resolved that it should only pass a life estate; and when the hardship of that rule was felt, and justice was more regarded, the Courts, bound by precedent, strove to evade it by fine-drawn distinctions. Such being the temper of the Bench, the mischief might have been cured by relieving them from the precedents, without stating any rule of construction, as by enacting, that "When a Court of justice has to decide whether a devise without words of limitation has passed more than an estate for the devisee's life, such Court may decide such question without regard to any decision made before this enactment in which a similar devise has been held to pass a life estate only." We have already shewn that the judicial interpretations of the words "month," "England," &c. may be corrected in the same manner. These are instances of rules arbitrarily interfering with the meaning of words; and there are many such which should be abolished. Besides these rules of misconstruction, there is a class of rules, also called rules of construction, which determine questions arising on mistakes and omissions in the framing of documents when the parties have said what they did not mean, or have omitted to say all that they meant, or when events shew that their meaning was defective or erroneous. There is method even in the errors and shortcomings of the mind. The science of that method is inductive and progressive, has nothing to do with policy, and therefore belongs exclusively to the Courts, subject only to the interference of the Legislature when they call upon it to relieve them from precedents which they would reject.

Mr. Brickdale concludes in favour of enacting rules of construction in certain cases, though he proposes two conditions which seem to exclude every case. These are—"First, not to enact any rule which would give to words an effect different from their primary meaning; and, secondly, not to attempt to enact a rule except when the cases in which it would operate could be foreseen with tolerable certainty." The first condition condemns every rule of construction in terms, and the second does so in effect; for a rule leaving things as they are independently of the rule is a nullity; and a rule of construction of which the operation can be foreseen with tolerable certainty is an impossibility.

Mr. Anstey would go far beyond his colleague in this matter. By the 2nd section of his bill for the interpretation of enactments, he proposes to enact, that "all enactments regulating, extending, restraining, or taking away rights, duties, or liabilities not originally created by statute, and likewise enactments amending or repealing such first-mentioned enactments, shall," except in certain specified cases, "be deemed and taken to be parcel of and incorporate with the common and unwritten law, and construed and expounded accordingly." This clause carries out a suggestion made by Mr. Ker in his second report—"That the objection so frequently urged, that it would be dangerous to limit and fetter the common law by subjecting it to the rules of construction applicable to statute law, might be obviated by enacting that such a code is to be considered as merely declaratory of the law, and providing that the same should be construed as if the same were part of the common law—a rule of construction which it would be often convenient to apply to consolidated statutes also."

A rule of construction as impossible as the even root of a negative quantity. The interpretation of statutes is the construing of words—the interpretation of the common law is what in natural science Bacon calls the interpretation of nature—induction from facts. To speak of construing a statute like the common law is to adopt the vulgar notion that the common law is to be collected mainly from the language used by the judges in explanation of their decisions, and not mainly from the recorded decisions and the facts decided on. By other clauses Mr. Anstey proposes to subject certain penal enactments to a strictly literal interpretation, and all other enactments to a liberal construction. These he admits to be questionable. We think that they are unquestionably wrong. A strictly literal construction of a penal statute means nothing more than escape for the guilty in certain cases. A liberal construction means excess of license to the judge.

Returning to Mr. Brickdale's comments, we come to some sensible remarks on conciseness of style, in the course of which he says, very truly, that the remedy lies in every one's hand, and is a matter of practice and not of invention. The bill, we are told, is presented "strictly as a specimen of the utmost attainable conciseness," and also as an example of the advantage of dividing the matter of an act into very short paragraphs, for ease of reference and amendment. This is very well, but it should not be put as a matter of discretion and degree. A single enactment is a command or permission to do or to abstain from doing a certain thing, and the number of enactments into which an act of Parliament ought to be divided is precisely the number of different combinations, either of a single case with several commands or authorities, or of several cases with a single command or authority. When the same command or permission applies to more than one case, the several cases must be distinctly stated in the enactment, and this may be conveniently done in distinct subdivisions or paragraphs. So, when several things are commanded or permitted to ensue upon a single case*.

"Another object kept in view in preparing the bill has been to reduce the law to propositions as general and abstract as possible;" and then follows a defence against the anticipated charge of consequential obscurity, which we do not understand. The question of the generality or abstract nature of an enactment is substantial, not formal. An enactment giving a leasing power to the trustees of a single settlement is less general than one giving such a power to the trustees of all settlements, and both are less general than one enabling trustees of settlements to deal with the settled estates in any way they may think fit for the benefit of the objects of the settlement. But the same draftsman would express all three in the same style, and, according to his skill, with the same clearness or obscurity. Whatever his object may be, he can only effect it by stating it, and the generality of the effect will be co-extensive with the generality of the statement. He may fail to say what he means, or his meaning may halt; but that is blundering, not obscurity. The causes of obscurity are to be sought in verbiage, involution, and superfluous statement of particulars.

Mr. Brickdale then proceeds to criticize the clauses of the Wills Act, 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, seriatim, and incidentally to explain and justify the details of his own bill, to the consideration of which we shall next address ourselves.

Section 1. "A testator may dispose by will of all the property, estates, and rights of every description and tenure to which he is in any way entitled at the time of his death, to the full extent of his interest therein."

The language is inaccurate, and hence probably a material oversight. The words "property," "estates and rights," are here used to represent ideas of different kinds, which cannot be classed together, the two last expressing relations of which the former is the subject. The clause in terms speaks of an interest in a right. "Of every description and tenure" should be "of every description or tenure," otherwise personal chattels, and other property to which tenure is not incident, would be impliedly excluded, which is not intended, though it ought to be. "All" and "every" should be "any." But the substantive defect in the clause is, that it does not except heriots and estates tail. A fee tail is wholly in the tenant for the time being, and this enactment would enable him to devise the entailed land for a base fee. And the clause purports to enable a testator to bequeath his personality away from his executors or administrators and creditors—an error which occurs in the existing Wills Act. But this would be corrected by the Courts. The mistake lay in extending the enactment to personality, the disposition of which was already provided for in a way not intended to be disturbed; and it shews the value of the rule—never to attempt a re-enactment of what is already parcel either of the common law or of the unrepealed statute law.

* See Code on Legislative Expression.

It may be noticed as a defect of arrangement, that the exception of quasi estates tail is made in a remote part of the bill, instead of immediately following and qualifying the general enabling clause.

Sec. 2. "All customs whereby a man is precluded from bequeathing the whole of his personal estate are repealed, but contracts that the personal estate shall be distributed according to any custom are not hereby invalidated."

This abolishes heriots except in cases of intestacy. It is also inaccurate in referring to the repealed customs as being in force at the passing of the act. The words go beyond the intention, which is merely to enable testators to overrule the custom, but not to abolish the customary distribution where there is no bequest. In the existing statutes the distinction is properly taken. The saving of a contract is superfluous, and betrays an apprehension that the draftsman has failed in confining his language to the subject-matter, which is wills.

Sec. 3 might have been spared. It is intended to obviate a most absurd doubt as to the operation under the Dower Act of a devise of lands acquired after the date of the will.

Sec. 4. "All real estate of a customary or copyhold nature may be devised without any surrender to the use of the will, and all customs preventing or limiting the power to devise any such real estate are repealed."

If this were not a model draft, it might be hypercritical to remark, that "nature" is not a word of art, and that the phrase "customary or copyhold" implies that copyhold is not a customary tenure. But the clause is wholly unnecessary, because power to devise copyholds is given by the 1st section, which does not require a surrender, as the provisions respecting fees imply.

Sec. 9, following the Wills Act, sanctions the erroneous notion that there could be a custom against surrendering to the use of a will.

At the present time naturally much interest is taken by all educated persons in questions relating to the rights and liabilities arising out of the state of war. In particular the rights of neutral powers, while several great powers are engaged in a war affecting their particular interests, and the interests of Europe generally, are the subject of serious consideration. On this subject we cannot do better, for the information of our readers, than to quote some passages from a most carefully-executed work lately published by Messrs. Hazlitt and Roche, members of the Bar*, on the Law of Maritime Warfare. At p. 138 occurs the following passage:—

"It has been shewn that while neutral powers are permitted to trade in innocent merchandise with the enemy, and to convey it to him, they may not convey it to him into places that are blockaded, with which all commerce is forbidden. It is expedient, therefore, next to explain what blockade is, and the manner in which it is considered by the law of nations.

"Blockade is the carrying into effect, by an armed force, of that rule of war which renders commercial intercourse, with the port or place, blockaded, unlawful on the part of neutrals.

"Amongst the rights of belligerents," says Dr. Phillimore in his able work on Licenses, (p. 49), "there is none more clear and incontrovertible, or more just and necessary as to its application, than that which gives rise to the law of blockade, as it has been ascertained, defined, and administered by the maritime tribunals of this country. The greater the research that shall be made into the principles of natural law, the more the details of the diplomatic and conventional history of Europe shall be studied, the more will it appear that this right has its origin in the purest sources of maritime jurisprudence, that it is sanctioned by the practice of the best times, and above all, that it is so essentially connected with the vital interests of Great Britain, that the renunciation of it, under any circumstances, must be regarded as the renunciation of one of the firmest charters of our naval pre-eminence, and as the surrender of one of the surest bulwarks of our national independence."

"If," says Vattel, (b. 3, c. 7, s. 117), "I lay siege to a place, or simply blockade it, I have a right to hinder any one from entering, and to treat as an enemy whomsoever attempts to enter the place, or carry anything to the besieged without my leave; for he opposes my undertaking, and may contribute to the miscarriage of it; and this involves me in all the misfortunes of an unsuccessful war."

"There are two sorts of blockade," says Lord

* "A Manual of the Law of Maritime Warfare; embodying the Decisions of Lord Stowell and other English Judges, and of the American Courts, and the Opinions of the most eminent Jurists; with an Appendix of the Official Documents and Correspondence in relation to the present War. By William Hazlitt and Henry Philip Roche, Esqrs., of the Middle Temple and Lincoln's-inn, Barristers at Law."

Stowell, in The Neptune, (1 Rob. 171), 'one by the simple fact only, the other by a notification accompanied with the fact. In the former case, when the fact ceases, (otherwise than by accident or the shifting of the wind), there is immediately an end of the blockade; but where the fact is accompanied by a public notification from the government of a belligerent country to neutral governments, the blockade must be supposed to exist till it has been publicly repealed, and notification of such repeal made, in the same way, by the belligerent country which has notified the blockade. This notification it is the duty of the belligerent country to make immediately; as, to suffer the fact to cease, and to apply the notification again at a distant time, would be a fraud on neutral nations.'"

In a subsequent passage the question of free ships free goods is discussed:—

"The right to capture enemy's property on board a neutral ship has been much contested by particular nations, whose interests it strongly opposed. In 1780 the Empress of Russia proclaimed the principles of the Baltic code of neutrality, which she declared she would maintain by force of arms; one of the articles of that code being, that all effects belonging to the subjects of belligerent powers should be looked upon as free on board of neutral ships, except only such as were contraband. Sweden, Denmark, Prussia, Germany, Holland, France, Spain, Portugal, and Naples, and also the United States, acceded to the Russian principle of neutrality; but, in consequence of the more effective resistance of Great Britain, the conventional term of neutrality thus attempted to be set up was abandoned in 1793, as not sanctioned by the law of nations, except in those cases where a positive compact had been made by treaty. In 1801 a second attempt was made by the Baltic powers to enforce the doctrines of armed neutrality asserted in 1780, but the attempt was again defeated by the undoubted naval superiority of Great Britain and Russia, by a convention with England, in June, 1801, expressly agreeing that enemy's property was not to be protected on board of neutral ships. The entire question of free ships free goods is thus ably reviewed by Mr. Wheaton, in his Elements of International Law, 182—183:—

"Although, by the general usage of nations, independently of treaty stipulations, the goods of an enemy found on board the ships of a friend are liable to capture and condemnation, yet the converse rule, which subjects to confiscation the goods of a friend on board the vessels of an enemy, is manifestly contrary to reason and justice. It may indeed afford, as Grotius has stated, a presumption that the goods are enemy's property, but it is such a presumption as will readily yield to contrary proof, and not of that class of presumptions which the civilians call "presumptiones juris et de jure," and which are conclusive upon the party."

"But, however unreasonable and unjust this maxim may be, it has been incorporated into the prize code of certain nations, and enforced by them at different periods. Thus, by the French ordinances of 1638, 1643, and 1684, the goods of a friend laden on board the ships of an enemy are declared good and lawful prize. The contrary was provided by the subsequent declaration in 1650; but by the marine ordinance of

Louis XIV, of 1681, the former rule was again established. Valin and Pothier (De Propriété, No. 96) are able to find no better argument in support of this rule, than that those who lade their goods on board an enemy's vessels thereby favour the commerce of the enemy, and by this act are considered in law as submitting themselves to abide the fate of the vessel; and Valin asks, (lib. 3, tit. 9, "Des Prise," art. 7), "How can it be that the goods of friends and allies found in an enemy's ship should not be liable to confiscation, whilst even those of subjects are liable to it?" To which Pothier himself furnishes the proper answer—"that in respect to goods, the property of the King's subjects, in lading them on board an enemy's vessels they contravene the law which interdicts to them all commercial intercourse with the enemy, and deserve to lose their goods for this violation of the law." The fallacy of the argument by which this rule is attempted to be supported consists in assuming, what requires to be proved, that by the act of lading his goods on board an enemy's vessel the neutral submits himself to abide the fate of the vessel; for it cannot be pretended that the goods are subjected to capture and confiscation ex re, since their character of neutral property exempts them from this liability. Nor can it be shewn that they are liable ex delicto, unless it be first proved that the act of lading them on board is an offence against the law of nations. It is therefore with reason that Bynkershoek concludes that this rule, where merely established by the prize ordinances of a belligerent power, cannot be defended on sound principles. Where, indeed, it is made by special compact the equivalent for the converse maxim, that free ships make free goods, this relaxation of belligerent pretensions may be fairly coupled with a correspondent concession by the neutral, that enemy ships should make enemy goods. These two maxims have been, in fact, commonly thus coupled in the various treaties on this subject, with a view to simplify the judicial inquiries into the proprietary interest of the ship and cargo, by resolving them into the mere question of the national character of the ship. The two maxims are not, however, inseparable. The primitive law, independently of international compact, rests on the simple principle, that war gives a right to capture the goods of an enemy, but gives no right to capture the goods of a friend. The right to capture an enemy's property has no limit but that of the place where the goods are found, which, if neutral, will protect them from capture. We have already seen that a neutral vessel on the high seas is not such a place. The exemption of neutral property from capture has no other exceptions than those arising from the carrying of contraband, breach of blockade, and other analogous cases, where the conduct of the neutral gives to the belligerent a right to treat his property as enemy property. The neutral flag constitutes no protection to an enemy's property, and the belligerent flag communicates no hostile character to neutral property. States have changed this simple and natural principle of the law of nations, by mutual compact, in whole or in part, according as they believed it to be for their interest; but the one maxim, that free ships make free goods, does not necessarily imply the converse proposition, that enemy ships make enemy goods. The stipulation that neutral bottoms shall make neutral goods is a concession made by the belligerent to the neutral, and gives to the neutral flag a capacity not given to it by the primitive law of nations. On the other hand, the stipulation subjecting neutral property found in the vessel of an enemy to confiscation, as prize of war, is a concession made by the neutral to the belligerent, and takes from the neutral a privilege he possessed under the pre-existing law of nations; but neither reason nor usage renders the two concessions so indissoluble that the one cannot exist without the other. It was upon these grounds that the Supreme Court of the United States determined that the treaty of 1795, between them and Spain, which stipulated that free ships should make free goods, did not necessarily imply the converse proposition, that enemy ships should make enemy goods, the treaty being silent as to the latter; and that consequently the goods of a Spanish subject found on board the vessel of an enemy of the United States were not liable to confiscation as prize of war; and although it was alleged that the prize law of Spain would subject the property of an American citizen to condemnation when found on board the vessels of her enemy, the Court refused to condemn Spanish property found on board a vessel of their enemy, upon the principle of reciprocity, because the American Government had not manifested its will to retaliate upon Spain; and until this will was manifested by some legislative act, the Court was bound by the general law of nations, constituting a part of the law of the land. (The Ne-reide, 9 Cranch, 388).'

'The conventional law in respect to the rule now in question has fluctuated at different periods, according to the fluctuating policy and interests of the different maritime states of Europe. It has been much more flexible than the consuetudinary law; but there is a great preponderance of modern treaties in favour of the maxim, free ships free goods, sometimes, but not always, connected with the correlative maxim, enemy ships enemy goods; so that it may be said that, for two centuries past, there has been a constant tendency to establish by compact the principle that the neutrality of the ship should exempt the cargo, even if enemy's property, from capture and confiscation as prize of war.'

Consistent with this is the declaration of the Crown of this country issued on the declaration of war, (see p. 404 of Messrs. Haslitt and Roche's work), which is as follows:—

"Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, having been compelled to take up arms in support of an ally, is desirous of rendering the war as little onerous as possible to the powers with whom she remains at peace.

"To preserve the commerce of neutrals from all unnecessary obstruction, her Majesty is willing for the present to waive a part of the belligerent rights appertaining to her by the law of nations.

"It is impossible for her Majesty to forego the exercise of her right of seizing articles contraband of war, and of preventing neutrals from bearing the enemy's despatches; and she must maintain the right of a belligerent to prevent neutrals from breaking any effective blockade which may be established with an adequate force against the enemy's forts, harbours, or coasts.

"But her Majesty will waive the right of seizing enemy's property laden on board a neutral vessel, unless it be contraband of war.

"It is not her Majesty's intention to claim the confiscation of neutral property, not being contraband of war, found on board enemy's ships; and her Majesty further declares, that being anxious as much as possible to lessen the evils of war, and to restrict its operations to the regularly organised forces of the country, it is not her present intention to issue letters of marque for the commissioning of privateers."

These questions have been the subject of a very recent debate in the House of Commons, in which we were glad to see that the intentions of the Government, in favour of a liberal view of the law of nations on this point, were adopted by the Legislature.

Surely this is not the time when a country placed, as England is, at the head, and as it were in the active lead, of political civilisation, should rely upon rights resting on those principles of policy which obtained in periods when war was, not as it now is, the inevitable mode of settling the differences between the Governments of different countries on certain material subjects of quarrel, but a bitter personal contest between the subjects of the respective Governments, in which personal hatred led to the desire of mutual infliction of personal injuries, and when consequently a reckless indifference to the private interests of the innocent subjects of belligerent countries, was one of the consequences of war, and one of the supposed elements of successful warfare. At this day, with better means of information, we see that when two nations are at war to settle some quarrel, on which no intervening power can adjudicate, the great object of each state is to destroy or cripple the resources of the other, quâ state, and no further. But we see also that to destroy the trade of either state with other states, not meddling in the contest, is not only grossly unjust, but injurious to both belligerent states, inasmuch as it inflicts injury on those who have nothing to do with the quarrel, and, by reflection back, injures both the belligerent states long after they shall have settled their quarrel. Hence it is now beginning to be understood that the more the pernicious effects of war are confined to the actually belligerent states, the better it is for them; and that the more the exigencies of war can be allowed to permit the perfectly free action of neutral states with each belligerent state, the less will be the evil sustained by each at the conclusion of the war. We regret that our limited space prevents us from going more into detail on this subject, to which, however, we may have occasion to return; and we cannot conclude our observations better than by calling the attention of our readers to the work from which we have extracted the passages above quoted, from which they will derive abundant and accurate information on the law of nations as it affects the intercourse of states at war, first, as between themselves, and secondly, as between them and neutral nations.

THE STATUTE-LAW COMMISSION.

Sect. 11 purports to define the cases in which a married woman may exercise testamentary volition. The third case is, that "a married woman may make a will in exercise of such powers as she is empowered to exercise by will notwithstanding coverture." Either this is a circle, or it implies the necessity of an express dispensation of the disability in the power, and thus alters the law. It should be, "in exercise of a power." If the power is limited to discovery, a will made during coverture is not made in exercise of it.

"Fourthly, a married woman who is an executrix may make a will appointing an executor or executors as to the personal estate of her testator." This should run, "who is or becomes a sole executrix."

The exceptions in favour of married women are made in the Wills Act by leaving them as they stood before the act, which is the safe and proper course, as well as the easiest. The case of a will made with the husband's consent is omitted from the draft, probably on account of the difficulty of expressing its conditions accurately—at any rate, no satisfactory reason is given for abolishing the privilege. It is true that such wills are not often made, and when made stand on a precarious footing; but the existence of a head of law in relation to them shews that they are occasionally useful. In cases where the possession of separate estate or of a testamentary power enables the wife to put the husband in his election, the privilege may be not only convenient, but important.

Mr. Brickdale's proposal to alter the law in respect of the wives of felons, by confining the exception to the husband's civil death, seems to have arisen from a confusion of conviction of felony with attainder, and of banishment for life, which is a species of civil death, with banishment for a term, which is not. A convict of felony forfeits his goods, and may be banished for a term without suffering civil death, and during the term his marital rights are suspended. (Ex parte Franks, 1 Moo. & Sc. 1). There is no reason for subjecting the wife of such a convict to testamentary disability. In Coombes v. The Queen's Proctor (16 Jur., part 1, p. 820) the Prerogative Court came to an erroneous conclusion, but we are not on that account to alter the law for the worse. The bill would also deprive the wife of an alien enemy of her power to make a will. All this is the result of undertaking to declare the common law.

Sect. 12. "The preceding section applies to all wills by married women made after this act comes into operation, whether such woman [women] were married before or after the passing of the act." If this is necessary, then innumerable titles supposed to be taken under the Fines and Recoveries Act are bad. Clause 21 is similarly superfluous.

Sect. 13. "A will must be in writing, and the testator must affix his signature thereto for the purpose of authentication."

Sect. 14. "The signature of the testator must be affixed or acknowledged by him in the joint presence of two witnesses."

Sect. 15. "Both witnesses must attest that the signature of the testator was affixed or acknowledged in their joint presence by severally affixing their signatures to the will in the testator's presence," [signatures as significant as Lord Burleigh's shake of the head.]

Sect. 16. "The testator may sign by the hand of another person, but the witnesses [a witness] may not."

These clauses seem to deal satisfactorily with the difficult subject of execution and attestation. But it would be neater to say (sect. 13) that "a will must be in writing, signed by the testator, for the purpose of authentication," for the word "affix" can be significant only to the effect of raising a quibble on the distinction between affixing and suffixing.

We dissent from Mr. Brickdale's criticism on Lord St. Leonards' Act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 24, that it "has proceeded in a wrong direction, and is not likely to produce beneficial results," and that the enumeration of certain particulars will exclude others. The act is correct in substance, though not a model of conciseness. It expressly provides that the enumeration of particulars shall not restrain the generality of the enactment which it follows; and in extenuation of the superfluities in the act, it may be urged that it was framed for the guidance of the very peculiar intellects of the Ecclesiastical Courts.

Sects. 17 and 18 contain alterations of the law of evidence, which we do not propose to discuss. But the allowance as attesting witnesses of persons incompetent from crime, &c., to give evidence is omitted without any apparent reason.

Sect. 20. "Wills in exercise of powers executed as required by this act are sufficiently executed, and the requisition of any additional or other form of execution or solemnity is of no effect." "Solemnity" is not a word of art, and it would be impossible to say, before a decision, whether it extended to registration, enrolment in Chancery or in the court rolls of a manor, &c.

In this, as in many other clauses of the draft, an affected and inaccurate use of the present tense may be noticed. The present tense is only proper where the enactment has an immediate transitory action, as where it is said that a certain custom is repealed. But to say of future wills that they are sufficiently executed, that a condition to be annexed to a future power is of no effect, &c., is to attain singularity at the expense of grammar.

Sect. 23. "It is to be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that all erasures, obliterations, and additions in a will were made after the execution thereof." Another illustration of the danger of attempting to fix the common law. An erasure or interlineation which gives sense to a passage otherwise insensible is not presumed to be made after execution: the proposed inflexible rule would defeat the will in such a case; for even if "evidence" could be held to include what is called "internal evidence," the fact that the will was insensible before the alteration affords no evidence of the date of the alteration.

Sect. 24. "All wills are revoked by marriage." The saving in the Wills Act of testamentary appointments of property which would not, in default of appointment, pass to the testator's heir or personal representatives, is omitted on account of the "inconvenience of having a trivial exception to a general rule." A strange reason! This trivial exception has in a case within our knowledge been the means of saving a large family, brought up in opulence, from utter destitution. The exception is not trivial, but essential. Inconvenience is to be anticipated from a rule which operates in cases beyond its principle, but not from an exception that makes the rule harmonise with its principle.

Sect. 28. "A specific gift by will operates as a gift of all the estate or interest of the testator at the time of his death in the thing given."

Sect. 29. "A general or residuary gift by will operates as a gift of all the property of the testator to which the terms of the gift are applicable at the time of his death."

These sections are intended to replace the 23rd and 24th sections of the Wills Act. The proper substitute for those sections is a blank. They were suggested by an unfounded distrust of the power of the general enabling clause. If before the Wills Act a testator bequeathed his horse "Trajan" to his nephew, and in the interval between the making of his will and his death sold and repurchased Trajan, the bequest took effect. The extension of the devising power to all real estate belonging to the testator at his death necessarily subjected devises of real estate to a similar construction. The 24th section of the Wills Act might be better expressed, and would be better omitted; but, except for superfluity, it is not objectionable in substance. Mr. Brickdale's 28th section would alter the law for the worse. "The thing given," being contrasted with the testator's estate or interest in it, must mean the land or chattel itself; so that if a testator, having a term of seven years in a farm, were to devise the farm even by the description of "his leasehold farm at A," or "all his unexpired term in the farm at A," and afterwards acquired the fee, (a case of frequent occurrence), the gift would pass the fee. In terms, indeed, the clause goes much further, for it makes a specific gift for life pass the fee, if the testator has the fee. The golden rule in dealing with questions of construction is, to abolish arbitrary regulations and irrational precedents, and leave the Courts to their own discretion.

LONDON, JULY 22, 1854.

THE law upon the effect of a power of appointment in a married woman has recently received an interpretation, which, if it be correct, will lead to consequences a little singular, and perhaps not altogether convenient. In the case of Vaughan v. Vanderstegen (2 Drew. 165) the Court elaborately discussed the principle on which the power of a married woman to contract debts, or, more strictly to speak, to incur liabilities, is based, and treated it as settled law that she can only do so in respect of her separate estate. The question, then, in that case, being whether the property over which a married woman has a general power of appointment by will only, without any limitation in favour of herself beyond a life estate, is liable, in the hands of her appointees, for debts contracted by her during coverture, it became necessary, for the purpose of deciding that question, to consider whether such property, or such power, is in any respect her separate estate; and the Court came to the conclusion that it is not; that the power is a mere power, and not an estate; that the property subject to it is in no sense the married woman's separate property; that she can have no enjoyment of it of any kind; and that the mere fact that she can dispose of it after her death by a special and particular mode of disposition, without the aid or intervention of her husband, does not make it her separate property: consequently that as, in respect of it, she is incapable of contracting a debt, it follows that it is not, in the hands of her appointees, liable to the debts incurred by her during coverture.

In the case referred to, however, the married woman had contracted some of the debts with which it was attempted to charge her appointed estate, by fraud, viz.

VOL. XVIII.

by representing herself during coverture to be a single woman; and that raised a question upon which the case has been since re-argued; (upon this point it is not yet, we believe, reported); and the same learned judge who decided the first point has held that the intervention of fraud makes a great difference; that it puts the feme covert in the same position as if she were sole; and that for her debts, so contracted under a false representation of her being sole, the property subject to her mere general power of appointment by will, is chargeable in the hands of her appointees, exactly as if she were a man or a feme sole; and the Court has held that it is quite immaterial whether the false representation of discovery is made for the purpose of defrauding the creditor, or whether it is made for family reasons, without any intention of particular fraud. It is sufficient if the feme covert holds herself out generally as a feme sole, and the creditor believes her to be so, to impart to her the power to contract a debt in respect of the property over which she has only a power of appointment; though, if there were no such misrepresentation, she would not have that power. The learned judge appears, in so deciding, to have relied much on the case of Savage v. Foster, (9 Mod. 35). But we must not assume that he decided altogether on the authority of that case, for it was in its circumstances extremely different from the case before him, of a power of appointment by will only. In Savage v. Foster the married woman had not strictly contracted or purported to contract any debt at all. What she had done was to allow the tenant for life of real estate, in which she had the remainder, to hold herself out and to convey as the tenant in fee; then she became discoverte, and being discoverte, the Court compelled her to complete the title which she had by her fraud suffered to be taken;

the property was her property, which she could convey, and therefore could be compelled to convey during her lifetime; whereas in Vaughan v. Vanderstegen it would quite have passed the power of the Court to compel the married woman either to pass any estate during her lifetime, or effectually to appoint after her death, by any act done during her lifetime; for having only a power to appoint by a revocable instrument, it is clear, that even if the Court could compel her to make a will—an exercise of power for which we do not believe there is any authority—yet, at least, the Court could not by any exercise of its power prevent her from revoking a will so made, and making another: so that the Court cannot be supposed to have proceeded, in Vaughan v. Vanderstegen, on the principle of treating the property subject to the power of appointment as being applicable, after the married woman's death, to the purposes to which she might have been compelled to appoint it during her life; but on the broad principle that fraud imparts to a feme covert a power to contract debt in respect of, and chargeable upon, as her general assets, that property over which she has only a general power of appointment by will.

The proposition is new, and a little startling, viewed with reference to the principle on which it has been held by the same learned judge, that, in the absence of fraud, a married woman has no such power. Without, however, at present attempting to go the length of doubting whether it is good law, we may conclude, as we did at the commencement of these observations, that it will probably lead to some results not altogether consistent with the established notions of the relative liabilities of husband and wife.

THE STATUTE-LAW COMMISSION.

Sect. 30. "In no case can a will operate as an exercise of any power which was not created before the making of the will." Mr. Brickdale says that in the case of a power the wish and intention of the donor of the power is entitled to the first consideration, and it is scarcely probable that he can mean that the property should pass by a will already executed, and necessarily made without reference to the power. This is to hide substance behind technicality. A general power of appointment is, for all testamentary purposes, the same thing as ownership, and should be governed by the same rules. A residuary gift is considered to represent the testator's wishes with respect to after-acquired property: why not also with respect to after-acquired powers? The question as to the donor's wishes is the same whether he gives a power or an estate. The intention in giving such a power is to give dominion either free from the disability of coverture, or without the power of irrevocable alienation inter vivos. The clause as it stands would deny operation even to an express recognition in the power of the efficacy of a pre-existing will.

Sect. 40. "If any person, who, if he had survived the testator, would have become entitled to any estate in tail or quasi in tail under a will, dies in the testator's lifetime, the gift does not lapse, but takes effect as if such person had died immediately after the testator, but not so as to give any estate or interest to any persons except those claiming under the entail." The intention of the saving clause is, we are told, to prevent the estate from becoming subject to the debts and contracts and the dower of the wife of the deceased devisee in tail, as if the estate had vested in him. We should be inclined to advise the widow to claim her dower "under the entail." The meaning is, that the gift shall take effect as if such person had died immediately after the testator, without leaving a widow, and without having alienated or incumbered the devised estate; but in seeking to avoid a direct expression of this meaning, the clause has been so framed as to defeat the devise in the event of the devisee having executed a general disentailing assurance of all his lands.

There is no equivalent for the 33rd section of the Wills Act, which prevents the lapse of a gift to a child who dies before the testator, leaving issue. The only reason offered for this omission is, that it is better not to encourage negligence or indolence in testators. We believe that nothing that can be placed on the statute-book would have any effect on the proceedings of testators, by way either of encouragement or of discouragement. But we are sure that the existing enactment cannot do harm, and that in very many cases it has prevented serious hardship. Whether it is right that the gift should be subject to the will of the deceased child is a subordinate question, which, however, we have no hesitation in answering in the affirmative.

Sect. 41. "Gifts by will to trustees are to be construed in the same manner as beneficial gifts in respect of the estates or interests conferred." This is called by Mr. Brickdale a simple and convenient rule. We think that ingenuity could not contrive one more fertile of uncertainty and confusion. It is an elementary rule of construction, applicable not only to wills and deeds, but to every expression of thought, that we must take the sense of words and sentences, not merely as the dictionary and grammar indicate, but with a view to the business in hand. Besides the general convention from which a language takes its form, it is subject to a lesser convention between the parties using it for the time being, and, like the opal, changes its indications with the point of view. Language is also always incomplete, and in it, as in painting,

Stands for the whole to be imagined."

But what whole is imagined depends upon the subject of the entire composition. A single sentence, however complete in construction, is senseless without its connexion. We commence a piece of music by announcing the key. A poet uses familiar words, but we seek in them the forms of things unknown; and when a testator tells us how he means his land to go, we so piece out the inevitable imperfections of his language as to evolve details consistent with his main design. In a fiduciary and in a beneficial gift the same expressions necessarily suggest different ideas, and to say that both shall be construed in the same manner, whether in respect to the estates or interests conferred, or in any other respect, is simply absurd. In the present case the absurdity is increased by the peculiarities of our law of real property. For example, a devise direct to the beneficiary must pass the legal estate if the testator has it; but how would the following devise be construed under the proposed enactment? "To A. and B. and their heirs, to the use of them and their heirs during the life of C., in trust for her separate use, and after her death to the uses of C.'s will; and in default of appointment, to the use of her children as tenants in common in fee." Or take a case like that in Doe v. Simpson, (5 East, 162), where the testator gave land to trustees, in trust out of the rents and profits to pay an annuity to A. for his life and to raise a legacy of 800*l.* for B., and after payment of the annuity and legacy, he gave the land to D., and he authorised the trustees to grant building leases. How are we to construe those limitations as if they were both to beneficiaries? Must we strike out the trusts? There will then be a gift to the trustees conferring the fee, followed by an executory limitation to D. in an event which is unknown, for we have struck out the words which describe it. Or if we argue, that as D. is not a trustee, the gift to him is not within the proposed rule of construction and may be read by the light of common sense, then we have an absolute gift to the trustees in fee, followed by an executory devise to D. to take effect when the annuity and legacy are paid, which, we presume, is the very construction that the clause was intended to exclude. Similar absurdities would result from the application of the proposed rule to cases where the question is whether trustees take an estate or a power. Then, for verbal criticism, the scope of the clause is confined to the legal estate, and the contrasted word "interest" is out of place.

Sect. 42. "In construing a will it is to be presumed, unless a contrary intention appears, that the testator did not intend to include in any general or residuary gift property vested in him only as trustee or mortgagee, but [intended] to die intestate as to such property." Mr. Brickdale is not confident in recommending this clause. It seems calculated to raise many doubts, to solve none, and to cause great inconvenience. What will indicate a contrary intention? Suppose the gift is of "all my lands, chattels, monies on mortgage, and other securities, and all other my real and personal estate." The doubts that arise under the existing law are few, and the convenience of including trust and mortgage estates in a general devise is great. The difficulty created by the doctrine in Cook v. Crasford (13 Sim. 91) should be met by correcting it. That doctrine, however, has no application to a mortgage, and there is certainly no reason for withdrawing mortgages from the operation of a residuary devise. If the law must be altered, let it be done by vesting trust and mortgage estates in the personal representative.

We may notice the 49th clause, for the purpose of correcting Mr. Brickdale's statement, that the bill contains no interpretation clause—it is an interpretation of the word "will," and a superfluous one:—"The provisions of this act relating to wills extend to all codicils, testamentary appointments, and other documents of a testamentary nature."

Mr. Brickdale also contributes drafts of two bills—one for the apportionment of rents-service and other payments of the like nature, and the other for the apportionment of periodical payments between successive owners—introduced by some judicious observations on the scope and policy of the Apportionment Acts.

Sect. 1 of the first bill runs thus:—"On the determination by any means of any payment in the nature of rent or interest for the use or forbearance of any property, debt, or right, on any day except the day of payment, a proportion thereof, up to the day of such determination inclusive, becomes due on the next day of payment." "Except the day of payment" should be "except a day of payment;" and "the next day of payment" after the determination of the rent is the Greek Calends. But even Mr. Ker would trust the judges to read this as meaning what would be the next day of payment if the rent were to continue. The remedy for the recovery of the apportioned part is not stated, and the only remedy would be an action of debt, not on the specialty, but under the statute. The act now in force gives an action on the case. The proper course would have been to add, that the remedies for recovering such proportion should be the same as those for recovering arrears of the rent.

Sect. 1 of the second bill enacts, that "where any person succeeds to the right to receive any periodical payment on any day except the day of payment, he shall pay to the person to whom he has succeeded, or his personal representatives, a proportion of the next periodical payment, up to the day of such succession inclusive." ["The person to whom he has succeeded" should be "the person whom he has succeeded."]

place in the interval between two periods of payment, a just proportion shall be paid to each person whose interest has determined, or to his personal representatives." ["Periods" should be "consecutive days," and "just" is either superfluous here or wanting in sects. 1 and 3.]

Sect. 3. "In ascertaining the amount of the proportion to be paid or received, a proportion of all expenses, charges, and outgoings paid by any successor are [is] to be allowed to him."

Sect. 4. "The successor is not liable to pay such proportion except in respect of payments actually received by him, but he is bound as a trustee for all the persons to whom he succeeds to obtain such payment."

In the case of A. succeeding B., and C. succeeding B. in one interval of payment, it is not expressed whether C. is to pay A. and B. their respective portions, or C. is to pay B. the amount of both, leaving him to pay to A. his portion. The former would probably be held to be the meaning, but it is not expressed, and sects. 1 and 2 are inconsistent in terms. And it is not made clear whether the successor is to pay the proportion in full to the extent of his receipts, or only in proportion to his receipts. The words "in respect of" might perhaps be held to bear the latter meaning.

The substantial objection to this clause is, that it would alter the law, by imposing on the successor the duties and liabilities of a trustee without giving him even the option of disclaiming, and that merely to avoid an imaginary inconvenience to the party liable to pay. Mr. Brickdale says that it seems "not fair to throw on the parties who are liable to pay the obligation of ascertaining that a case for apportionment has occurred and the correct amount to which each party is entitled, at the risk of being obliged to pay twice over." The hardship here suggested is impossible. The party to pay must know that a succession has occurred, for he is to pay to the successor—a new hand; and he cannot ascertain the successor's title without also ascertaining the time when it accrued, and consequently the correct apportionment.

We do not understand with what object the bill prepared by Mr. Rogers for consolidating the statutes relating to masters and servants, and masters and workmen, has been printed. It is little more than an arrangement of the enactments now in force or supposed to be in force, copied for the most part without any verbal alteration beyond what the dislocation and rearrangement of the materials rendered absolutely necessary, but also with occasional arbitrary alterations and amendments. The result is, a repulsive and not very intelligible patchwork of clauses, drawn in all varieties of style, from the time of George II downwards—preposterous as a bill to be passed, and useless as materials for legislation, because not a faithful transcript of the existing law.

We have studied the reports of the commission with an anxious desire to find on them some hope of a lasting amendment of the statute law, but we have been disappointed. Mr. Coode is the only one of the commissioners who shews either wish or capacity to investigate the foundations of things, and to devise a comprehensive and consistent scheme of procedure; but his theory is not adopted, nor, as far as we can discover, even understood, by his colleagues or by the Lord Chancellor; and if the commission, as now constituted, is continued with any practical effect, the statute law will be periodically deranged by isolated consolidation acts, drawn on no common principle, often worse drawn than the acts replaced by them, forming no part of a system, and consequently involving no protection against the desultory and anomalous reforms of such amateurs and others as may not choose to sail under the commissioners' flag. A well-arranged and well-expressed code, like any other intricate machinery, would reject unskilful tinkering; but in the activity of the present commission we see only an additional element of derangement. Change even in the form of the law is a great temporary evil: let it not be encountered without the prospect of an equivalent permanent good.
